Brezhnev first in dual role

Moscow (AP) — Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev has reached a new pinnacle of power after a 45-year climb through the Soviet Union's political hierarchy. But even his latest triumph — election as national president while continuing as head of the party — may not be a ticket to complete one-man rule of the country.

Brezhnev was elected president Thursday in a unanimous vote of the 1,500 member national parliament, replacing Nikolai V. Podgorny. The parliament was told that Podgorny, 74, wanted to step down "in connection with his retirement on pension" and he was voted out without further discussion.

Brezhnev, 70, is the first Soviet leader in history to occupy the party leadership and the largely ceremonial presidency at the same time. Although the new job for Brezhnev represents the biggest Kremlin power shuffle since Nikita S. Khrushchev was ousted as premier and party leader in 1964, there is no sign that it will materially alter the way Kremlin decisions are made.

"I don't think the new presidency adds one jot to Brezhnev's real power," one

Western diplomat in Moscow said. "It does add to the dignity of his position, but he will continue consulting with the other leaders."

Brezhnev has a reputation — some say his continued power depends on it — of always consulting his fellow members of the party's ruling Politburo before making decisions. Even though he is the nation's undisputed leader on a day-to-day basis, the principle of collective leadership reasserted after Khrushchev's ouster is still party policy.

The economic leadership of the country remains in the hands of Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, 73. After Stalin and Khrushchev, both of whom held simultaneously the party leadership and the premier's job, the Communist party decided that one man should no longer occupy both posts.

Brezhnev also made an uncharacteristic comment May 24 attacking Stalin's ruthless power in what many diplomats saw as an agreement not to be a dictator himself. Brezhnev said some years of Stalin's rule were "darkened by illegal repressions" and "the party has resolutely condemned this practice and it should never be repeated."

Accepting the presidency Thursday, Brezhnev said "I should like to reassure you, dear comrades, that I shall try to be worthy of the people's trust."

Brezhnev is not expected to have much of an additional workload from the presidency, which in itself carries little power and is an office he held from 1960 to 1964 before becoming party leader. He will have a first deputy president under the new draft Soviet constitution who can handle any work that may arise.

Many observers in Moscow suggest that the reason Brezhnev received the presidency was either to put him on a more equal protocol level with foreign heads of state or to give him a reward — relatively harmless in terms of real power — for his years of service.

The lack of any honors for the outgoing Podgorny suggests he opposed Brezhnev's elevation or had other political disputes with the party leader. But the details of any Kremlin power struggle that took place on the eve of Brezhnev's election may not be known for years.

The election of Brezhnev as president does little to clarify the standing of other members of the 14-man Politburo in regard to who Brezhnev's eventual successor as Soviet leader may be. The most senior other Politburo members are now believed to be Mikhail A. Suslov, the 74-year-old chief party ideologist, and Andrei P. Kirilenko, 70.

Brezhnev's health is a subject of constant speculation in Moscow, fanned by his occasional disappearance from public view without explanation. The last time, he dropped from sight for seven weeks in March and April 1976. He now often wears a hearing aid and, according to foreigners who have met him, sometimes seems to have trouble speaking. His mind seems entirely alert, however.

Brezhnev's takeover of the presidency is the latest step in a gradual process of aggrandizement since he became party leader in 1964. At first he, Podgorny and Kosygin observed strict equality, but by 1965 Brezhnev was getting clearly more attention in the officially controlled press.

'Farmers must promote food as bargain idea'

By Lynn Zerschling
Star Staff Writer

Gov. J. James Exon, back in Lincoln from a lobbying trip to the White House, said Thursday that more than ever farmers have a "selling job to do."

"One of the problems we have in agriculture," Exon told The Lincoln Star, "is that we have to do a better job selling the people and convincing the American housewife that food is the best buy in the country today."

"We've got to quit making apologies and making ourselves a scapegoat every time there is an increase in the price of food."

Americans spend only 17% of their disposable income on food products, the governor said, a figure which he said is the lowest in the world.

Farmers need to change their image, Exon indicated, because they are caught in deep financial troubles which are growing steadily worse.

But the people in Washington who have the power to help change that situation, still hold on to what Exon called a "cheap food policy."

That farm policy, one of the Ford Administration's, is now one of Carter officials', the governor said.

"The problem is, some politicians cave into that and say the consumers won't stand for" costlier food.

The governor said consumers would be reasonable and accept higher food prices if the reasons for increased costs were explained.

"We've been entirely too timid and have been digging ourselves out of the hole all the time," Exon said.

Exon said he made those remarks to the delegation of 50 farmers and bankers, who accompanied him to Washington, after they failed to persuade Carter officials to boost the current loan rate for wheat and other crops.

Exon said he really didn't expect President Carter's aides to change their minds about boosting price supports. Carter has said he would veto legislation, being considered by the Senate, which would set levels higher than those the administration wants.

"Our whole purpose was to bring home to the people the problems we're facing out here," the governor said, such as the 1976 crop surplus.

Farmers borrowed heavily to plant crops last year. When the harvest came in, many rejected the price offered for wheat and decided to store the grain and gamble for a better price this year. So far, the gamble hasn't paid off.

When it came time to plant this year's wheat, corn and milo crops, many farmers had to go back to their banker for another loan. Inflation, the need to expand operations and lower prices have combined to create severe credit problems, Exon said.

Exon commended the administration for taking steps last April to make more credit available to farmers under one loan program.

He said Deputy Agriculture Secretary John C. White gave the delegation some good news Wednesday.

White announced a loan program to encourage the construction of storage areas for wet grain. Details on the program are to be outlined soon.

Additionally, Carter aide Bert Lance agreed with Exon that some bookkeeping procedures need to be changed. Exon said current methods give a distorted view of the total cost of the nation's farm programs.

Currently, when farmers receive federal loans, the loans are not marked down as loans, but shown as an expense item, Exon explained.

"Everyone talks about the high cost of farm programs. There is no way anyone can get a firm grip on the true costs under this type of arrangement."

Lance, who is director of the Office of Management and Budget, agreed the procedure was "grossly unfair," Exon said.

Some farmers and politicians still think the appointment of consumer advocate Carol Foreman as assistant secretary of agriculture is unfair, Exon said.

At a luncheon meeting Wednesday, Republican members of Nebraska's congressional delegation again voiced concern that Mrs. Foreman won't adequately represent farmer interests.

Although Mrs. Foreman is not the person he would have picked for the job, Exon said, she has become the "whipping girl" of some Nebraska politicians.

Taking pot shots at Mrs. Foreman "makes good politics in Nebraska," the governor said.

But, he asserted, it can only hurt farmers "if we continue to sit out here and moan and groan and criticize and complain and not even admit that someone representing consumer interests should be in the Department of Agriculture."

Even though the Nebraska farmers, bankers and politicians failed to persuade the Carter administration to raise farm prices now, they're not giving up, Exon said. He has enlisted support from other governors who plan to mount similar pilgrimages to Washington.

"Unless we keep the pressure on," Exon predicted, "they'll tend to forget about us back here."

The bus system has experienced a decline in ridership during the current fiscal year of 3%, resulting in a projected revenue of $700,000. Nonetheless, the proposed budget predicts an increase of 5% in ridership, bringing in revenue of $730,000.

Jim Donaghy, manager of the LTS system, said the increase is expected because of promotional campaigns that will be undertaken, route changes that may pick up new riders and the addition of 13 new buses to the system that will serve new areas.

He also said that the first monthly gain in ridership since November was recorded in May with an increase of 6% over last year.

On another matter, the LTS board decided to delay a potentially cost-cutting reduction of the number of minibuses from three to two.

The board decided to delay the move because street construction is slowing the minibuses. The buses are to be spaced eight minutes apart. Two would increase the usual wait to ten minutes. But Donaghy said the street construction will make the wait even longer.

In addition, board members said, a comprehensive study of bus routes will be undertaken late this summer and fall and recommendations on the minibuses could be a part of that overall study.

Changes in the minibus line are being considered since it lost most of its passengers when the downtown loop was established for regular full-size buses.

Board members lamented a lack of suggestions from the public on what to do with the minibuses. Despite news stories in which the board solicited comment, only five letters were received, board member Joan Bowers reported.

Judge Ralph Slocum of Lincoln will be asked to consider removing all but citizens from the commission before the 1978 election campaign gathers much steam.

The "sunshine law" takes full effect July 1, and commission members have already met to organize their efforts.

Mimi Waldbaum of Omaha, who lists her occupation as "homemaker and community volunteer," has been elected the commission's first chairman.

Wallace Peterson of Lincoln, chairman of NU's economics department for a decade, is vice chairman.

And retired Lancaster County Judge Ralph Slocum of Lincoln will be commission secretary.

Other members are Lola Jean "Mickey" Staley of Omaha, a "presently retired" businesswoman; James Davis of Omaha, attorney and a former Secret Service agent who once served as security advance man for Henry Kissinger, and JoAnn Kimball of Lincoln, former assistant to NU's president, now director of special projects for the Lincoln campus.

All six citizen members have investments in the stock market. Most also hold government securities, and have money in banks and savings accounts.

Several also list real estate holdings and insurance assets.

Mrs. Waldbaum is former state president of the League of Women Voters and a member of the Nebraska Commission on Drugs. She was a candidate for the State Board of Education in 1976.

Her financial interest (together with her husband) include a farm, an egg and egg products processing company in Wakefield and stocks and bonds in a variety of concerns, including International Business Machines and Pacific Gas and Electric.

Mrs. Kimball is a former president of the Junior League of Lincoln and the Nebraska Art Association.

Her financial interests include holdings in companies ranging from General Motors and American Telephone and Telegraph to J.C. Penney.

Mrs. Staley, who formerly lived in Lincoln, was assistant state coordinator for Jimmy Carter's 1976 presidential campaign in Nebraska and served on the rules committee at last year's Democratic national convention.

Her holdings range from Brunswick to Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co.

Slocum practiced law in Lincoln for 30 years before his selection as county judge in 1961. He retired this year.

His financial interests include real estate, government securities and stock in AT&T.

Davis was awarded a number of military decorations in Vietnam, participated in a police corruption investigation in Chicago and helped supervise a corruption strike force in Indianapolis before returning to Nebraska last year to practice law.

His holdings include shares in IBM, AT&T and Exxon.

Peterson was a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate in 1970 and 1972.

His holdings include real estate and mutual funds.

Senate rebuffs Carter stands on Korea, Cuba

Washington (UPI) — The Senate refused Thursday to support President Carter's plan to withdraw U.S. ground troops from South Korea or to allow the sale of medical supplies and food to Cuba.

It was a double legislative defeat for Carter who has announced he will withdraw about 33,000 ground troops from South Korea within four to five years and wants to begin improving relations with Cuba.

The twin actions came as the Senate worked on a $1.7 billion authorization bill for the State Department, the U.S. Information Agency and the Board for International Broadcasting in fiscal 1978.

The Cuba issue disappeared quietly when Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., withdrew his section in the bill which would have authorized the sale and transfer of medical supplies, agricultural and food commodities to Cuba.

But the Korea troop issue triggered a lengthy and divisive debate.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd urged his colleagues to approve an amendment — slightly toned down from the version in the bill — which would express support for Carter's plan to reduce U.S. troops in South Korea. It purely expressed the sense of the Senate and did not force the president to do anything.

The bill originally would have affirmed Carter's intention to withdraw all troops — stationed there since the Korean War — in four or five years.

But Byrd's substitute ran into widespread opposition among Democrats and Republicans.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., bluntly said, "I am convinced that this action could lead to war in South Korea."

Others, including Senate GOP leader Howard Baker, said the Senate was acting before committees had fully heard testimony on the impact and consequences of the withdrawal and that the Senate was giving Carter full authority and abandoning its own powers.

"We are effectively putting the stamp of approval on the President's announced plan," Baker said. "And I don't think we know enough about that."

The revised amendment, which was adopted 79-15, deleted any reference to Carter's withdrawal plan and said simply that "Congress declares that U.S. policy toward Korea should continue to be arrived at by joint decision of the President and Congress."

Nebraska Sen. Carl Curtis voted not to adopt the amendment, while Sen. Edward Zorinsky voted with the majority of 79 votes in favor of the amendment.

Court rules religion can't guarantee day off

Washington (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled on Thursday that employees don't have a legal right to take a day off from work for religious reasons.

The case involved a Trans World Airline worker who wanted to take Saturdays off for religious reasons. But the court said that to require TWA to give the employee Saturdays off when his seniority did not afford him that privilege would "involve unequal treatment of employees on the basis of their religion."

Specifically, the court's 7-2 decision held that employers are not required to give an employee certain days off to accommodate religious beliefs when a union seniority system stands in the way or when the accommodation would result in preferential treatment for that worker.

The result is a legal setback for the millions of persons throughout the nation whose religions dictate that they not work on particular days of the week. It has particular impact for those whose religions observe any day other than Sunday because American work schedules free most persons from work on Sunday.

A 1972 amendment that Congress tacked on to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 orders employers to accommodate workers' religious beliefs and practices when such accommodation does not involve "undue hardships" for the employer.

Without ruling that such a law is unconstitutional establishment of religion, the court's decision Thursday effectively nullified the impact of the 1972 amendment.

In dissent, Justices Thurgood Marshall and William J. Brennan called the court's action a "fatal blow" to the government's intent of protecting religious freedoms.

"The ultimate tragedy is that despite Congress' best efforts, one of this nation's pillars of strength — our hospitality to religious diversity — has been seriously eroded.

"All Americans will be a little poorer until today's decision is erased," the two justices said in an opinion written by Marshall.

Justice Byron R. White wrote for the majority in reversing a decision in the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that had been won by Larry G. Hardison, a former TWA employee at the carrier's Kansas City maintenance shops.

Hardison was fired by TWA in 1969 after refusing to work from sundown on Fridays to sundown on Saturdays. A member of the Worldwide Church of God, Hardison's religion barred work during that Sabbath period.

After signing on with TWA in 1969, Hardison at first worked hours that accommodated his need for Saturdays off. But when he transferred jobs at the Kansas City base, union seniority rules required weekend work for him. TWA and his union, the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, said he could not change his work schedule.

Hardison sued TWA and the union, claiming they were guilty of religious discrimination in violation of the Civil Rights Act. The Supreme Court decided Thursday that if religious discrimination existed, it did not violate the 1964 law and its 1972 amendment.

"In the absence of clear statutory language or legislative history to the contrary, we will not readily construe the statute to require an employer to discriminate against some employees in order to enable others to observe their Sabbath," White said.

White had sounded reservations when the Hardison case was argued before the court last March.

A former All-America and professional football player, White appeared intrigued by the arguments of a union attorney who said that giving Hardison Saturday off for a religious reason would not be fair to those workers who perhaps wanted Saturdays off to see their sons play football, a secular reason.

One portion of the Civil Rights Act banned on-the-job religious discrimination. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission interpreted that portion of the law to require employers to take affirmative action in protecting the religious beliefs of their workers.

Congress made that more explicit with its 1972 amendment, sponsored by Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., himself a member of the Seventh-day Adventist religion, which observes Saturday as its Sabbath.

Bryant is greeted by rallies

Houston (UPI) — Singer Anita Bryant was almost upstaged Thursday in a controversial performance at an attorney's convention by opposing rallies by homosexual rights advocates and a Baptist preacher.

The Florida orange juice promoter, who was paid $7,000 for an upbeat "Broadway song and dance" show at the State Bar of Texas' dinner, shunned invitations to debate her gay opponents or to attend the Christian rally held in her behalf.

But Miss Bryant, who became a national figure by leading a successful drive to overturn a Miami, Fla., gay rights ordinance, planned to meet reporters Friday after a closed prayer breakfast.

Meanwhile, the growing scope of the opposing campaigns was apparent as Southern Baptists meeting in Kansas City passed anti-homosexual resolutions and gay rights leaders billed Houston as the starting point of a national counter-attack.

Barring rain, gay leaders planned an evening rally followed by a march, carrying candles and wearing armbands, past the hotel where Miss Bryant was hired to sing. The march was to climax with a rally in nearby park.

The Rev. Joe West of San Antonio, Tex., planned an opposing rally in the same park at the same time.

Carter reported not budging on water projects

Washington (UPI) — President Carter indicated to midwestern and southern lawmakers Thursday he may not accept a Senate "compromise" that would deny funds to only half the 16 controversial water projects he wants to kill.

Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan., said Carter "certainly implied" at a White House meeting with midwestern members of Congress that even the proposed dropping of eight more projects from a public works money bill would not be acceptable.

"He implied he would stand fast and that if (the Senate proposal) was not acceptable," she said.

"I hope he sticks to it."

Rep. Butler Derrick, D-S.C., a leader in a nearly successful House attempt to cut all 16 projects from the budget, said Carter told southern lawmakers at another White House meeting there was a "strong likelihood" he would veto a public works money bill even if the eight projects were dropped.

Derrick said Carter, asked about a Senate subcommittee's proposed compromise, said he already had compromised when he reduced to 17 his original list of more than 30 projects.

Derrick joined in the unsuccessful House attempt to knock out 16 of the controversial projects still in the bill, even though they included the Richard B. Russell Dam project — part of which lies in Derrick's district.

Assistant Senate Democratic leader Alan Cranston of California said earlier he believed

Carter would accept the compromise worked out Wednesday by the Senate Public Works Appropriations subcommittee.

But Cranston told reporters he had no assurance from the White House Carter would accept the bill even if the Senate version wins out.

"I don't have any direct word that he's ready to compromise," said Cranston. "But I don't think he's going to demand 100% of what he's after."

For Carter to demand that work stop on all the projects would be "highly injurious" to his relations with Congress, Cranston said.

In a move designed to avert a showdown with Carter, the Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., recommended work stop on eight projects that the House refused to kill. Stennis made it clear to reporters afterward that the decision was intended to prevent a veto of the $10.5 billion public works money bill.

Just the day before, the House refused by a vote of 214 to 194 to halt funding for 16 of 17 projects that Carter wanted stopped. The 17th — the Grove Lake Reservoir project in Kansas — was abandoned in committee and no attempt has been made to revive it in either the House or the Senate.

The projects stricken by the Senate subcommittee were Lafarge Lake, Wis.; Lukata Lake, Okla.; Meramec Park Lake, Mo.; Yatesville Lake, Ky.; Fruitland Mesa, Colo.; Savery-Pot Hook, Colo. and Wyo.; Narrows Unit, Colo., and Oahe, S.D.

11 wounded in Soweto shootings

Johannesburg, South Africa (AP) — Police shot and wounded 11 blacks in two segregated townships Thursday night on the anniversary of bloody rioting in Soweto, authorities said.

Police opened fire on youths throwing stones from behind roadblocks in Soweto, the nation's largest black township and scene of rioting last June that set off months of racial upheaval in which 600 blacks and three whites died.

Nine blacks, all but one of them teen-agers, were hospitalized in Soweto. In southern Cape province, two blacks were shot by police after a group was arrested for holding illegal gatherings. The arrest followed looting and arson in the rural black township of Kabah.

Brig. Jan F. Visser, white police chief of Soweto township 10 miles southwest of Johannesburg, confirmed the shootings in five different areas Thursday evening between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m.

"The police held back as long as they could, but when their lives are endangered, they have to protect themselves," Visser said. "We had hoped not to have to use force."

Visser said police were forced to open fire after being heavily stoned trying to remove roadblocks set up by blacks as residents returned from work. Students had called a work boycott to mark the anniversary but thousands of the 250,000 black commuters reported to their jobs.

Saboteurs blasted two sections of rail lines near Soweto early Thursday, injuring a white policeman. Blacks in a township 40 miles east of Johannesburg stoned a police car, a train and a delivery truck.

Police used tear gas and new riot control equipment to disperse crowds in several townships near Johannesburg and Pretoria during the daylight hours when no shootings were reported.

Many of Soweto's one million residents dressed in mourning and packed churches and community centers to pray for the victims of last year's racial violence.

Civil liberties union backs child porno bill

Washington (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union has endorsed a bill designed to check the growing business of child pornography.

The ACLU, a traditional defender of the First Amendment protection of free speech, had previously said another child pornography bill was unconstitutional.

The bill receiving the ACLU endorsement Thursday would make it a crime to use any child to produce pornographic materials. Violation could bring up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

"Because the proposed legislation carefully distinguishes between production and distribution of such materials, the ACLU supports the bill," said Martin Guggenheim, an attorney with the Juvenile Rights Project of ACLU.

The bill by Sens. John C. Culver, D-Iowa, and Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., "seeks only to regulate conduct, not constitutionally protected speech. By making criminal the use of children in the production of pornographic materials and not attempting to regulate the distribution or dissemination of materials," the bill meets constitutional requirements, Guggenheim said.

"Moreover, the bill properly fills a gap in existing law as no federal statute directly prohibits the production of such materials."

Guggenheim testified before a Senate judiciary subcommittee.

Previously, ACLU official Heather Florence had testified against a House bill that prohibits distribution of certain types of pornographic material. She said such a bill would be unconstitutional.

Guggenheim repeated the objections to the Senate version of this bill, saying, "The First Amendment prohibits restraints on speech even when that speech is offensive or of little or no value," he said.

The bills are aimed at a problem that has shocked congressional panels in recent weeks, child pornography.

Culver said his subcommittee had found "a picture of a shocking form of child abuse taking place across the nation. Young girls as well as boys are involved in the production of pornographic materials and prostitution."

"Most often these children are tricked or enticed into these activities by adult predators using gifts, food, drugs or threats of violence. This activity and the materials it produces have grown into a multi-million dollar trade threatening the well-being of thousands of children," he said.

Also testifying was Deputy Attorney General Peter Flaherty, who said the department also wants to find a constitutional way to end the business of child abuse.

He said the Culver-Mathias bill, with some small changes in wording, probably could do this. "The further you go, the more you run into problems with constitutional challenges. Even with this bill, I'm sure we'll run into challenges."

Flaherty said a federal law dealing with child pornography is preferable to the 36 state laws and five federal laws now dealing with the subject in various ways.

Farm view disagrees on energy

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Speakers at an energy conference sponsored by the American Farm Bureau Federation have attacked the Carter administration's energy proposals as emphasizing conservation at the expense of production.

The Farm Bureau wants to keep agriculture's high priority for energy, especially natural gas which is used to make fertilizer and to run irrigation pumps, among other things.

"Our energy problems will be easier to solve if we let the market work rather than if we refuse to do so. There must be recognition that agriculture is an efficient user of energy and that there is no readily available substitute for agriculture's special energy needs," said Robert Delano, vice president of the farm bureau.

Nebraska farm delegation returns empty-handed

The Nebraska delegation which met with administration and congressional leaders in Washington Wednesday to talk about economic problems on the farm came away empty-handed, at least so far as promises for increased loan rates on this year's crops are concerned.

If the delegation made any dent at all, it was in demonstrating once again the persistence of the agricultural sector in demanding equitable treatment by the government, and in opening up direct dialogue between federal officials and a greater number of farmers, bankers and agribusinessmen. Gov. Jim Exon's leadership and connections have been most helpful in this regard.

But Nebraskans must understand by now that the Carter administration:

—Apparently will not be persuaded that its estimates of production costs for various crops are too low.

—Will be most reluctant to permit an increase in loan rates or other price supports much above what it has already suggested; thus, a veto of current farm legislation is a certainty. In its efforts to cut spending, the administration believes that a costly (which at the same time could be described as adequate) farm program is out of the question.

—Does not differ from most recent administrations in assigning the wishes and needs of the farm sector lower priority than non-farm business and the consumer bloc — demonstrating once again the diminishing political clout of the agricultural sector and government's usual insistence on an inequitable cheap food policy which ultimately could have disastrous consequences.

The Nebraska contingent's trip was not a complete loss; it never hurts to keep the lines of communications open and to keep the pressure on.

But political reality had already dictated, in our estimation, that changing the administration's mind on loan rates for this year's crops or for gaining other concessions, for that matter, would be akin to moving mountains.

We hope to be pleasantly surprised.

But it would appear that the more things change (like administrations), the more they remain the same.

Trampled human rights

The world is witnessing some excellent examples of part of what the Helsinki agreement of two years ago is all about. In setting forth agreements on East-West accords, the Helsinki document established basic understandings on human rights.

Just this week, the Soviet Union flagrantly violated the human rights of a U.S. journalist in that country, Robert C. Toth of the Los Angeles Times. Toth had been questioned, for up to six hours in one session, by Soviet authorities without any knowledge of the purpose of the inquisition.

He was, of course, without legal counsel in the matter. After making their point with Toth they let him leave the country. Anything more than that would have been a serious international risk for Russia.

The Russians are probably reacting to two things. One, the review now started in Belgrade of the Helsinki agreement is not the Russian's cup of tea. While a signatory to the agreement, the Russians have paid no attention to the document.

Two, U.S. President Jimmy Carter has undoubtedly hit the Russians where it hurts in his insistence upon worldwide recognition of human rights. Again, the Russians are intent upon doing exactly as they please and resent any outside influence upon them.

Toth is an example to the rest of the world of just how independent the Russians believe themselves to be. With emphasis throughout the world on human rights, the Soviets go on stage to denounce such rights.

It is one of the U.S.S.R.'s bully tactics and it is hoped that it works about as well as such things have in the past for them. Outside of their own sphere of military control, the Russians have not managed to scare anyone into anything.

It is not that their military power is questioned or not respected. Certainly it is. But the world knows that it cannot accede to such dictatorial tactics if freedom is to have any future at all.

Communist leaders in Russia hope to squelch the west's emphasis on human rights by stomping those rights in the ground. It is hoped the free nations have no part of the affair and continue their pressure on behalf of humanity everywhere, including behind the Iron Curtain.

Everyone else is out of step

Ralph De Toledano

Washington — With the passage of time, the world grows zanier and zanier. The usual rules and standards of political action and political thought melt into one big wax ball.

In the Senate, Republicans are reasonably at ease with Jimmy Carter, while the Democratic leadership either spits or bites its nails at the mention of his name. The President, whose campaign propaganda cut at Gerald Ford because of all the bills he had vetoed, is brandishing his own veto on a number of important Democratic bills.

Liberty Lobby, which spouts a line so extremist that even the wildest of the wild shudder, is playing footsie with the U.S. Labor Party, an organization which makes some claims to leftism. They both see eye-to-eye in their hatred of Nelson Rockefeller and Coca-Cola.

Leonid Brezhnev, the tsar of all the Russians and all of Eastern Europe, comes up with a new constitution to replace the arsenic and Leninist lace that Joseph Stalin promulgated. With a straight face, it does away with the "dictatorship of the proletariat" — substituting the "state of the whole people."

Even Comrade Brezhnev must have blushed at that "dictatorship of the proletariat" chestnut.

In the Soviet Union, the rich get richer and the poor get poorer at a faster rate than in the "decadent" West, and the proletariat can't blow its nose without permission of the elitist commissars and intellectuals who run the show with an iron hand.

But the "state of the whole people?" The Armenians and the Volga Germans, and the Moslems — all third-class citizens in a state in which everyone else is a second-class citizen. We should send Sen. Hayakawa to Russia to teach them semantics.

Zany did I say? On Saturday nights I turn on a local TV talk show to hear Carl Rowan, once a Kennedy administration stalwart and now a newspaperman, holding forth against Columbia students and faculty because they blocked appointment of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to a teaching post.

The people who won't allow Kissinger a difference of opinion, our Carl says, are the same ones who bleat about academic freedom.

Very true. But I recall a reporting trip to Rhodesia taken by Max Yergan, a black like Carl Rowan, and Rep. John Ashbrook of Ohio, and myself some 10 years ago. We traveled around the country, we talked to many people, and we set down on paper what we had seen and heard. But Rowan consigned us to outer darkness, calling us "racists" and worse because he disagreed with what we said.

I recall the old song which told of a "Barnum and Bailey world, just as phony as it can be," and I think of other cases, other examples.

President Carter made much of human rights.

He spoke out against Chile because it holds a couple of dozen political prisoners in the kind of durance vile which includes pleasant quarters, television sets, and visits from the Organization of American States to make sure that they are not mistreated.

But the President's devotion to human rights suddenly vanishes when it comes to Cuba — the most viciously repressive state in the Western Hemisphere, with thousands living in agony in the Isles of Pines concentration camp. If friendly relations with Cuba were in the American national interest, Mr. Carter's sudden blindness would be understandable. But it is Cuba which needs American recognition desperately, and the Soviet Union — spending $3 million a day to prop up the Cuban economy — which will be the major beneficiary of "normal" U.S.-Cuban relations.

What it reminds me of is the old Quaker saying: "Everyone is crazy except thee and me, and I have my suspicions about thee."

Haig optimistic about peace

are doing in the NATO alliance, rather than on what they are doing in Moscow and the Warsaw Pact countries.

—For example, we have to work out our problems in the Eastern Mediterranean with Turkey and Greece. Turkey, he insisted, has a standing army of 500,000 men and can quickly call up another 750,000. Failure to resolve this allied problem in Greece and Turkey, he thought, could be extremely serious.

—The major problem with the Soviets is not on the central front of Europe — despite the Soviet military build-up in the Warsaw Pact countries — but on the periphery; in the Eastern Mediterranean, the Middle East, and in Africa.

—The Soviet military build-up is not "mindless." Ever since the "missile crisis" in Cuba, they have been correcting their strategic weaknesses, and are now working on getting bases on both sides of Africa along the oil transport lines from the Middle East to Western Europe and the Americas.

—Meanwhile, the Communist political challenge in Italy, France, Spain and Portugal has to be watched and handled very carefully, for there is as much and maybe more of a psychological problem among the European peoples than a military problem.

Haig said he thought some progress was being made in NATO despite the obvious political problems. He believed the days of separate training and maneuvers by the national units was over and that the integrated central command was much better. The standardization of weapons and ammunition was a slow process, he said, but President Carter was trying to minimize "national competitiveness" and pressing the Pentagon to contract for new weapons manufactured in Europe.

Meanwhile, he thought that the controversy between the U.S. and the Soviet Union over "human rights" had not only clarified the philosophic conflict between East and West, but had persuaded other members of the Alliance that they must improve the military defenses of the West.

It was important, Haig suggested, to hold the line in Europe but not to lose sight of what he thought was the major threat of Soviet policy around the edges of the Euro-Asian continent.

The Soviet Union was now, he observed, not only a super power, but "the last of the empires." It discovered in the Cuban missile crisis and the African conflicts of the '60s, that it did not have the transportation systems to use its power on a global scale. It was working on this problem steadily but not recklessly, Haig said. It had increased its power on land and on sea, but still needed bases beyond the internal seas of the Baltic and the Mediterranean to operate effectively on a world scale.

The NATO problem, Haig suggested, was to recognize that this was a natural development for a new "world power" and to counter it on the periphery as NATO had countered it in the center of Europe.

Haig thought this could be done if the Western democracies were not weakened by Communist coalitions or by conflicts over economic problems within the alliance.

Turkey seemed to be on his mind more than anything else. As an anchor of the alliance in the Eastern Mediterranean, when Israel was in a state of political transition and confusion, and when Moscow was trying to take advantage of the NATO divisions, Turkey, he said, was vital to the defense of the West and everything possible should be done to resolve its conflict with Greece over Cyprus.

Most of these problems were political, Haig said, and therefore beyond his authority, but the Soviet Union had as many problems in the East as NATO had in the West, and he was confident that a political as well as a military balance of power could be maintained.

If, he concluded, NATO remained a democratic coalition and kept its eye not only on the central front in Europe but on the rising political problems in the Middle East and Africa, then, he believed, the alliance could go on into the '80s without the fear of a major conflict between the super powers.

Protection in the area of sexuality

Ellen Goodman

Though half the population of 21 million teenagers between 15 and 19 are sexually active, we have continued to make it difficult for them to get information about birth control and to buy contraceptives.

In the name of "sex prevention," this negligence has been at least partially responsible for the rise in teenage pregnancies. Today one out of every ten teenage girls becomes pregnant every year, a rate higher than that in 18 other developed nations.

Last week the Supreme Court took a first major step in removing some of the barriers between teenagers and birth control. They struck down a New York State law that banned the sale of non-prescription drugs to anyone under 16 years of age. At the same time they ruled against two other provisions in the statute: one that said only licensed pharmacists could sell these contraceptives, and another that prohibited companies from advertising or displaying them. There are similar laws in more than 20 other states that will also be affected by this ruling.

In the decision, the 7-2 majority rejected the old argument of the State of New York that freely available contraceptives would increase sexual activity. They also overruled the dissent of Justice Rehnquist, who fumed about "the right of commercial vendors of contraceptives to peddle them to unmarried minors through such means as window displays, and vending machines located in the men's rooms of truck stops."

Justice Rehnquist's fantasies aside, the point is to bring contraceptives to sexually active teenagers, to turn the old barriers into conduits. Not to promote sex, but to deal with its reality. Short of locking the entire teenage population in their rooms, the only thing that adults can do is to "help" them avoid the most permanent and disastrous of consequences.

Each year more than one million teenagers become pregnant. Of these, 30,000 are under the age of 15. Teenagers have a third of all the abortions in the country (yet how little we hear from the anti-abortion groups about fostering birth control).

Twenty-one percent of pregnant teenage girls give birth out of wedlock, with 87 percent keeping their babies. Arthur Campbell wrote in the Journal of Marriage and the Family about these girls: "Suddenly she has 90 percent of her life's script written for her.

Teenagers give birth to 600,000 children every year, which means that one out of every five American children has a teenage mother. But more importantly, less than a third of these mothers wanted babies. They became pregnant largely out of ignorance about, and lack of access to, birth control methods.

Ignorance and inaccessibility — these are issues that the adult population can deal with in terms of protecting the children.

The Supreme Court decision will help. But as Dr. Daniel J. Callahan wrote in a Planned Parenthood study of teenage pregnancy: "At the very least teenagers should have as much knowledge of sex, as many and as good services available, as do adults ... The most we can do is to help them avoid those things we know will hurt them, help to reduce the impact of those acts (even of folly) which they have already done, help them, in a word, to make it through the teenage years with as little lasting harm as possible."

award-winning drama about prison life, "Short Eyes," so realistic that when it was brought here and played before an audience at a local prison, the inmates wanted to know what institution the actors were serving time in.

His sequel, "The Sun Always Shines for the Cool," which picks up the lives of the ex-cons out on the street some years later, is world-premiering here now, and it is just as powerful as "Short Eyes." The play says more about the causes, nature and execution of urban street crime in America than a library of academic dissertations on the subject, mostly because Pinero, in addition to being an unusually gifted writer, has himself been there and back.

His plays are no weak, liberal, weeping excuse for criminal behavior; no glorification of street life; no doctored-up version of what it's like to be on the hustle. His characters are violent, mean, bound by no code except their own, willing to do almost anything for the money it takes to have the respect of their own.

And partly because no excuses are made for them, they are very, very real people, living in a world better understood because of Pinero's writing.

Street life is something hard for outsiders to grasp; a world apart, sliding in and out of mainstream vision only when it victimizes the innocent; operating under its own complicated rules; speaking its own language; administering its own "justice."

And understanding is the key. You don't fight something you don't understand, not and win. Few law enforcement officers have that understanding, almost no one else does.

Pinero's plays, if they get the kind of attention they deserve, could prove to be a good lesson on the long road to an education we badly need.

to induce increased emigration from Russia.

Today, we are on the strategic defensive; communism is subverting Europe and moving into Africa; we no longer have the big stick with which we can speak softly. Without quiet power and the will to use it, quiet diplomacy loses its effectiveness.

That is why it is so important to call the Soviets to account for their broken promises of Helsinki, and to show the world the difference in human terms between totalitarian and free societies. At the moment, the power of our example is about the only power we have left.

For us to blame ourselves for the way the Soviet rulers retaliate on their own people when we support their dissidents is to turn truth on its head. As the Soviet dissidents know, their suffering — and the publicity given their savage repression — has an effect on world opinion, and ultimately must have its effect on moderating repression in the Soviet Union.

Three charged in 1975 shooting

Omaha (UPI) — Three Omahans were charged Thursday in the 1975 syndicate-type slaying of real estate broker Ronald Abboud. The arrests capped one of the most intensive criminal investigations in the Omaha area in recent years.

C. Michael Anderson, 25, a former employee of Abboud, and Peter Hochstein, 23, Anderson's alleged hired "hit man," were ordered held without bond on first degree murder charges.

Charles Paige, 25, charged with accessory after the fact, was ordered held in lieu of $25,000 surety or $100,000 cash bond with a 10% posting provision.

All three appeared before Douglas County Judge Samuel V. Cooper, who set their combined preliminary hearing for June 28. Cooper said no bond would be allowed on the first degree murder charges at least until the preliminary hearing.

Abboud's body was found with three .22 caliber bullet wounds in a field near 168th and Q Sts. Nov. 2, 1975. His family reported him missing Oct. 29.

Douglas County sheriff's Capt. Ren Gruber said deputies armed with search warrants combed the residences of the three Thursday. They were arrested by deputies Wednesday night.

"We're still looking for the pistol," Gruber said following the search. "But we did find other information pertinent to the case that we can't reveal at this time."

Deputy Douglas County Attorney Sam Cooper said the case was based on evidence that Anderson, now president of Independence Plaza Inc., allegedly paid Hochstein $1,500 to shoot Abboud, 40.

Abboud was head of Commercial Realty Co.

Cooper, who is no relation to the judge, said Paige allegedly knew about the shooting after it occurred but didn't participate in it.

Cooper said Anderson had been a suspect in the case because of financial irregularities in Abboud's real estate business where Anderson was employed at the time of the shooting.

Cooper said during the past three weeks evidence and information materialized to warrant the arrests.

Cooper said part of the evidence against Hochstein is from a man who said he recently saw Hochstein and recognized him as the "Jim Parker" seen with Abboud the day before the shooting.

The veteran prosecutor said "Jim Parker" telephoned Abboud the day before the shooting and asked about buying some real estate near 168th and Q Sts. Abboud allegedly took him and another man to look at the property.

The next day, Oct. 29, Cooper said, "Jim Parker" allegedly returned to the property with Abboud and shot him. Abboud's body was found in tall weeds along a creek bank by two youths herding cattle.

Records showed Independence Plaza Inc., incorporated on Nov. 13, 1975, is a construction and real estate firm with Anderson as its president, treasurer and a director.

Hochstein is listed as manager of an apartment complex and as working in the construction business while Paige is listed as a salesman for an electronics firm.

Cooper said neither Anderson nor Hochstein had any significant prior criminal record.

Abboud had served 13 months in the Nebraska Penal Complex after being found guilty of aiding two city councilmen in soliciting bribes from Chicago investor John B. Coleman, who wanted to rezone a tract of ground for townhouses.

He returned from prison and went back into the real estate business in 1970.

Cooper said the sheriff's department headed the investigation with supplemental information coming from Omaha police, the State Patrol and private investigators hired by the Abboud family.

Radio arrangement ends in courtroom

Papillion (UPI) — Calls of an intimate nature were being broadcast from an I-80 truck stop on a citizens band radio.

Sarpy County sheriff's deputies went into action.

The three officers approached a truck driver, asked him to cooperate and gave him a $20 bill.

The plan was that the three officers would hide under his truck and when contact with the female prostitute on the air waves was made, the trucker was to go to the cab and signal the officers by tapping his air brakes just after the money changed hands.

The officers were apparently unaware the truck had air brakes, and when the trucker tapped them, the blast startled one officer to the extent he bumped his head.

Then the three climbed into the cab and took a 24-year-old Omaha woman into custody.

Her male companion, who identified himself as Marvin Timmerman, 24, of Waterloo, was arrested a short time later and officers said he had about 400 suspected amphetamine pills in his possession.

Sarpy County Judge Eugene Atkinson set cash bonds totaling $2,000 for Timmerman Wednesday on felony charges of possession of narcotics and pandering.

The woman went free because Deputy County Attorney James Cripe said most state prostitution charges deal with pandering.

Unless there is a city ordinance involved, Cripe said there is no really effective prostitution law against females.

Sobbing mother testifies

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

A sobbing 19-year-old mother told a jury in U.S. District Court Thursday that her daughter was taken away from her for two months after she was arrested by Broken Bow police.

Teresa Oleson Janski said she returned to her Broken Bow apartment on the afternoon of July 15, 1975, to find her home in shambles. City police officers and a state patrolman arrived shortly after and arrested her, but would not tell her why, Mrs. Janski said.

After police took pictures of the inside of her house, she and her daughter, Valerie, then 2 years old, were taken to the Broken Bow police station. Mrs. Janski said she was put in jail and not told what would happen to her daughter.

"I was very scared," she said, crying. "That night I was thinking, 'Why did it happen to me? What would happen to Valerie?'"

Valerie was put in a series of foster homes, and Mrs. Janski could not regain custody of her until September.

Mrs. Janski was arrested for possession of a controlled substance but the charges later were dropped when state laboratory reports showed substances found in the apartment were not illegal drugs. Mrs. Janski said pills taken from her apartment by police were prescription medicine for a rash.

According to testimony at the trial, a former boyfriend of Mrs. Janski apparently broke into her house while she was out of town and scattered garbage and food around the apartment.

Police had been called after James E. Peister, Broken Bow city manager and housing authority director, had received complaints of a strange odor coming from the apartment. Police Chief Robert Jatczak discovered what he thought to be four marijuana seeds and some other drugs in the apartment.

Although charges against Mrs. Janski were dropped one week later, Valerie remained in foster homes. At a hearing in August, 1975, to determine Mrs. Janski's fitness as a mother, pictures of the vandalized apartment were introduced as evidence against her. Valerie was declared a neglected child.

Mrs. Janski said she was depressed while her daughter was away from her. "When they took her, that was the end," she said. "There wasn't a day that passed that I wasn't crying."

Mrs. Janski got her daughter back Sept. 23 after another hearing.

After the arrest, she also said, her friends and family shunned her because they thought she was a drug addict.

Mrs. Janski is suing for $130,000 in damages for the incident. U.S. District Court Judge Warren K. Urbom dismissed the suit against the police officers but ordered attorneys for Peister and Jatczak to present a defense.

Judges plan to help on crime code

Hastings (AP) — The Nebraska District Judges Association has decided to form a committee to advise senators in the 1978 Unicameral on the criminal code.

Sarpy County District Court Judge Ronald Reagan, legislative chairman for the association, said the committee could help with wording or procedures in the revised code that could cause problems.

Reagan said he thinks it is important that lawmakers have such input because the district court judges will have to work with the revised code daily.

He said the general consensus seems to favor a criminal code that will classify crimes with sentencing, as the revised code does. He said certain portions of the code, such as the penalty for possession of marijuana, have sparked debate. But, Reagan said, most judges believe policy is properly set by the Unicameral and the judges' duty is to carry it out.

Reagan commented Thursday during the second day of a three-day judicial conference here.

More Medicaid money in jeopardy

By Michael J. Bugeja

United Press International

If the state fails to inspect several nursing homes by June 30, Nebraska may lose another quarter's allotment of federal Medicaid funds.

Nebraska already is scheduled to lose nearly $1.4 million in Medicaid funds next month because at least one nursing home failed to comply with federal Medicaid statutes.

Federal officials are pressuring the state to make inspections on five nursing homes, or face losing additional federal funds.

The five nursing homes are the Beatrice State Development Center, the Bethesda Care Center at Exeter; the Valley View Care Center in Nebraska City, the Orchard Hill Nursing Manor of Omaha and the St. Vincent's Home for Aged in Omaha.

However, state and nursing officials contend that three of the homes underwent recent inspections and were approved. The St. Vincent's Home has been closed and Orchard Hill is in the process of being closed, according to the State Welfare Department.

Welfare Deputy Director Derald Lembrich said his department has been informed that the five homes must be inspected by June 30, but, he said, "he could not understand why these (five) particular homes were named."

Lembrich admitted the Orchard Hill home has a "problem," but the home is being emptied of its patients.

"All the clients have been removed, except one or two. They have been relocated to other nursing homes," he said.

Several areas of the Beatrice Home were cited for inspection by the June 30 deadline, including two hospital annexes, a cottage area and four wards.

However, Lembrich said the cited areas were inspected this spring.

"They were re-certified in the proper time frame; they were on schedule. I don't know what the problem is, but it may be a goof-up of records in Washington," he said.

Lembrich said the Bethesda-Exeter and Valley View homes also were inspected on time.

Albert Inman, president of Valley View Care Center, said doctors of the American Academy of General Practice have called for a moratorium on signing certain Medicaid certificates and may have jeopardized the federal funding.

"The doctors decided to cut down on paper work. We were told we could lose our funds if this didn't get corrected."

Inman said at least one doctor refused to sign 10 "re-certification" certificates. The doctor alleged to have refused to sign the certificates was in Canada and unavailable for comment.

"Doctors are supposed to fill out these forms on Medicaid patients, listing the medications the patients are on. They are required to do this every 60 days."

Another official of the Valley View home, who requested anonymity, said the home this week had an unannounced inspection. "The (State) Health Department said they came on a complaint. Usually they give notice," she said.

She said the home, built in 1975, had a brief inspection by the fire department on "one or two little things," but as far as she knew, the home had met all inspection requirements.

Dr. Henry Smith, State Health Department director, said about 90% of routine nursing home inspections are announced. "But when we receive a complaint, the normal procedure is to inspect without notice," he said.

David Burdine, president of the Bethesda home, said the Exeter facility was inspected in the last "four to six months."

Gerald Grieppentrog, state coordinator of the Beatrice home, said the facility "recently had been inspected by the State Health Department. The Beatrice home was approved," he said.

Auto homicide to be charged

United Press International

The Douglas County attorney's office said Thursday a Lincoln man would be charged with misdemeanor motor vehicle homicide in the early morning traffic death of an Omaha motorcyclist.

Omaha police said Jerome A. Geiger, 36, was killed when his eastbound motorcycle collided with a westbound car that was turning left.

Deputy County Attorney Tom Brown said the driver of the car, Alex J. Borchardt, of Lincoln, who will be 36 today, had a blood alcohol content of .10, the minimum under Nebraska law for intoxication.

Brown said Borchardt would be charged with misdemeanor motor vehicle homicide. Brown said police reports showed Geiger also had been drinking, but blood tests were incomplete.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Pacific St. and I-80.

In addition, the State Patrol said Scott O. Jones, 21, of Chappell, was killed in a two-car crash 9.7 miles east of Chappell on U.S. 30. The patrol said the accident occurred just after Jones had passed another car on a hill.

The driver of the westbound car, Ervin A. Dirks, 62, of Chappell, was in fair and stable condition at an Ogallala hospital Thursday. Dirks was to be transferred to a Denver hospital.

Omaha home all alone in original order

By Regina J. Hills

United Press International

The Nebraska Welfare Department Thursday said the Orchard Hill Nursing Manor in Omaha is "in the process of closure" because the facility apparently failed to comply with federal standards.

However, one nursing home official said that the patients are being removed from Orchard Hill in order to save the state nearly $1.4 million in federal Medicaid funds.

Orchard Hill was at the heart of a recent U.S. Health, Education and Welfare Department decision to withhold from Nebraska nearly $1.4 million in Medicaid payments.

Deborah Lembrich, deputy director of the State Welfare Department, said Orchard Hill was "the only one (nursing home) in the original sanction order." He said regional HEW officials at Kansas City, Mo., Thursday confirmed that Orchard Hill was the only Nebraska nursing home named in the initial HEW order.

H.G. Wandel, of Fremont, who said he is Orchard Hill's temporary administrator, confirmed that the State Welfare Department had ordered the removal of welfare patients to save the $1.4 million. But, Wandel said, the home is not being closed.

The patient removal began Wednesday and probably will be completed Friday, Wandel said. In all, 42 welfare patients were to be removed, leaving two non-welfare patients behind, he said.

"They spit 'em (welfare patients) all over — wherever they could find an empty bed."

Wandel, a licensed nursing home administrator, said he sold the 18-year-old nursing home last year to James A. Cummins Jr. on April 1, 1976, the manor was taken over by Cummins, Wandel said.

Wandel said he stepped in recently to help out at the home, partially because he still has a "sizeable (financial) investment" in Orchard Hill. Plus, Wandel said, Cummins is "allowing me the privilege of coming in here and trying to help these old people and their staff."

Wandel charged that Orchard Hill failed to meet federal standards because of "mismanagement."

"The principal reason for not coming up to standards? Mismanagement. Up until about a year ago, it (Orchard Hill) had a good reputation — best in the Omaha area," Wandel said.

Wandel said the State Health Department found numerous deficiencies at Orchard Hill and tried to work with Cummins to correct the inadequacies.

Wandel also said he has tried to get permission from the State Departments of Welfare and Health to rectify the deficiencies at the home. But, Wandel said, department officials "won't work with me."

Nebraskan accused of Rome fraud

Rome (AP) — James Roderick Russell, identified as a businessman from Nebraska, has been arrested and jailed here on fraud charges involving the marketing of detergents in an alleged "pyramid sales" scheme, police reported Thursday.

Police sources also reported that arrest warrants had been sworn out for another dozen U.S. nationals but that none had been arrested.

According to the police, Russell is president of Bestine Spa., a firm based in Rome that set up a distributorship for selling detergents door-to-door.

Repeated phone calls to the Bestine offices went unanswered.

Police gave the following account:

Company officials lined up agents to sell the products. These agents were required to buy 1.5 million lire worth — $1,650 — of goods.

Because an area was often saturated with distributors, subsequent sales by the agents were sometimes difficult, but they were allowed to work off their debts to the company by lining up further agents.

The system is known as "pyramid selling," and has been banned in some countries, including parts of the United States.

Police said Russell had 8,000 distributors lined up, and could have taken in over $13 million.

Rogers predicts Thome won't run in governor race

Omaha (AP) — A candidate for the Republican nomination for governor spoke to the Optimist Club of Omaha Wednesday — but he didn't talk politics.

Vance Rogers, retired president of Nebraska Wesleyan University, says he will start campaigning early next year.

After his speech, Rogers said he believes there will be more than two candidates in the Republican primary for governor but that he doubts First District Rep. Charles Thome will join the race.

One reason, Rogers said, is that by staying two more years in Congress, Thome's pension rights would be 50% greater.

Man drowns in Axtell ditch

Axtell (AP) — A 51-year-old resident of a home for physically and mentally handicapped people drowned Thursday in an irrigation ditch, the Kearney County sheriff's office said.

Authorities said Eugene Ennes, a resident of the Bethpage Mission, wandered from the grounds and apparently fell into the nearby ditch.

Man wakes up to changed life

West Point (AP) — Lloyd Harrington, 56, of rural West Point had his life changed last September when his heart stopped beating for four minutes.

"There's no one who can tell me now that that wasn't my day of judgment," he said.

He described envisioning a "kaleidoscope of lights" and experiencing a feeling of "extreme emotional torment" which no words can describe.

When the feeling subsided, he said he felt "peace and happiness. When I woke up, the doctor said, 'We're lucky you're here Lloyd.'"

Harrington was an office manager at the nearby Iowa Beef Processors, Inc., plant for six years prior to his heart attack.

He put in six, 10-hour days each week and smoked more than two packs of cigarettes daily, along with "two or three cigars" and several pipes of tobacco.

Last summer he began to have chest pains and to experience shortness of breath while doing normal light work such as pushing the lawn mower. Finally, in July, he went to a doctor.

"I thought I had emphysema or lung cancer. It didn't occur to me it could be heart trouble."

The physician told Harrington not to do anything too physical. He also told him to quit smoking, but he didn't until Sept. 3.

That night Harrington went to bed with chest pains. He took the prescribed dose of nitroglycerin, but the pain got worse. At midnight, he called the doctor who arrived "within 15 minutes."

The doctor drove him to the hospital where he was placed in the intensive care unit.

He thought he was doing good, but at 10:30 a.m., Sept. 7, "Boom! I went into cardiac arrest. I was unconscious, clinically dead for four minutes with no respiration or circulation."

While recovering he saw two other heart attack victims brought into the hospital on consecutive days. Both were in their 50s. Neither survived.

"I got the message. I was saved for some reason or other," Harrington said.

Now that he is back on his feet, Harrington's whole lifestyle has changed. He does not work at a job, he speaks to church and civic organizations, relating his experiences, telling his audiences "not to fear death."

"I don't fear death now at all. It's a beautiful experience."

Omaha policeman fired

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha Police Department fired a 10-year veteran officer this week when other police officers found 9 1/4 ounces of marijuana at his home.

He was identified as Brian Johnson, 32, of the burglary unit. Police went to his home on a tip, investigating officers said. Johnson was issued a ticket for misdemeanor possession of marijuana.

Five agents cited

Five Nebraska county Extension agents have been named state winners of the 1977 public information awards program, it was announced Thursday.

The winners and their categories: Mick Everston of Kimball, radio program and news column; John J. Linscott of Imperial, single news photograph and series of colored slides; Denee O'Dea of Bridgeport, direct mail piece; John Schade of Benkelman, feature story; and Larry Hannon of Oshkosh, newsletter.

Omaha board member asks for resignations

Omaha (AP) — Omaha Public School Board member Don Cunningham Thursday called for the resignation of five members of the school board.

In a press conference, Cunningham asked board members Dr. Paul Kennedy, Dorothy Beavers, Mrs. Morris Frank, Mrs. Gaynelle Goodrich, Leo Hoffman to resign for what he called "violation of the spirit of the open meetings law and gross partiality."

Cunningham charged that the five conspired to limit the number of nominees to fill a vacancy on the school board. He said he believes the five have talked privately about whom they wanted to fill the vacancy and that, he said, violates the section of the open meetings law that prohibits closed meetings for the discussion or selection of new board members.

Cunningham said he will take his complaints to the school board ethics committee if the five do not resign.

Harvesting begins for wheat

Lincoln Star Special

Barneston — Wheat harvesting began this week in southeastern Gage County near the Kansas border, a grain elevator spokesman reported Thursday.

The first load of 1977 winter wheat arrived at the Lincoln Grain Co. Wednesday, a spokesman said.

Taken from the Gerald Powell wheat fields four miles east of Barneston, the grain was running 20 bushels per acre, according to Mike Graham, who is employed at the elevator.

Powell's wheat tested "good" at 50 pounds with moisture 13 to 10%.

High humidity in the area was delaying harvest operations.

Bear shrugs drugs, rangers

Jackson, Wyo. (AP) — A 200-pound black bear that bit a 14-year-old Omaha, Neb., Boy Scout in the leg Tuesday proved Thursday that it is as thick-skinned as it means.

A Grand Teton National Park spokesman said the bear shrugged off two tranquilizer darts meant to kill the animal, eluded rangers and disappeared into the mountains northwest of here Thursday.

The rangers had located the bear at a campground, where the animal was rummaging through a food locker and terrorizing some campers.

Park officials said rangers would try again to find and destroy the bear.

Home teachers want changes

'Ads may make men look foolish'

Omaha (AP) — Men may look more foolish than women in "ring around the collar" type commercials that imply women are responsible for men's appearance, according to the president of the National Association of Commissions for Women.

"I don't know who is made a bigger fool . . . men or women. Some of the children are starting to ask why he doesn't wash his neck," Dr. Emily Taylor of Maryland told a news conference Thursday.

Protests over sexism in television commercials are "happening all over the country (and) the ads do get removed," said Anita Miller of Sacramento, who heads the California Commission on the Status of Women.

The addition of women to news teams has allowed viewers to see "not only women in the ads, the dingbats, but professional women" as well, Mrs. Miller said.

Dr. Taylor said ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment is a "top issue" for the association, which is meeting Thursday through Saturday in Omaha.

"The population in general is very supportive" of equality and that support "must be translated into legislative votes," Dr. Taylor said. "In no way do we assume that men cannot be persuaded to vote appropriately on this issue."

The strength of 15 state Equal Rights Amendments that have been ratified "does not compare" with the power of an amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Mrs. Miller said. "The point that must always be remembered is that what the state legislature gives, the legislature can also take away."

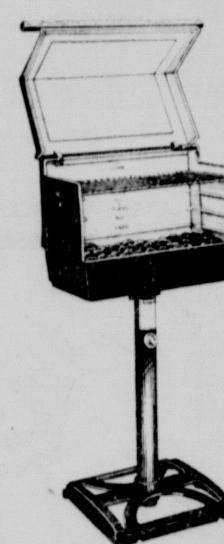

Dr. Taylor said that although President Carter has appointed some "very fine people," she is "not personally satisfied with what he's done" to promote equality in government.

Sharyn Campbell of Washington, D.C., who is the association's vice president, said women "have made a great deal of progress in the credit field," but "implementation of the law is not yet complete."

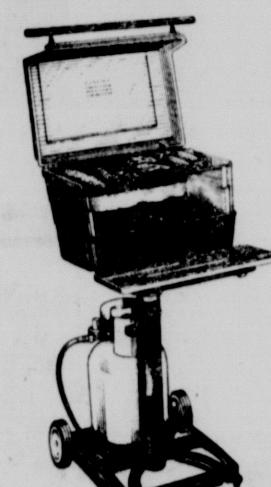

"It's in the best interest of the credit field, a profit-oriented industry," to provide equality in credit, she said.

Treatment centers different

By Linda Olig

Star Staff Writer

Full Circle and the Independence Center do not unnecessarily duplicate services, according to a study prepared by the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs (LCAD).

The two residential drug and alcoholism treatment centers serve different clients and provide specialized services to accommodate those differences, the LCAD study found.

The report, prepared at the request of the City County Common, was approved Thursday by the LCAD board and forwarded to the Common by way of the city-county human services administrator.

"It is necessary to duplicate separate and distinct inpatient, out-patient and family care programs if the needs of the clients served by the two agencies are to be met," the study concluded. Treatment at the two centers is "specialized by methods of treatment and types of clients."

There are "more programmatic dissimilarities than similarities," a sub-committee found after extensive discussions with the agencies.

Full Circle, operated by Lincoln-Lancaster Drug Projects, is primarily a residential treatment center for persons between the ages of 17 and 29. The Independence Center is classified as an inpatient hospital model for persons over 14 years of age.

The study found that there are differences in age, sex, education and employment of residents at the two facilities. Based on statistics from the agencies for the five-month period beginning May 1, 1976, the study found that the average Full Circle patient was a male under 30 who has not finished high school and is unemployed. During the same time, the average Independence Center inpatient was a male 30 or older who has finished high school and is employed.

Both agencies also treat clients on an out-patient basis.

Full Circle's clients also reflected "many asocial tendencies" and were alienated from their families.

"Full Circle's clients were more in need of habilitation while Independence Center's clients were more in need of rehabilitation," the study found.

For the reporting period, 81.2% of Full Circle's total clients were classified as having the "primary problem" (of) abuse of drugs other than alcohol, compared to 10.2% at the Independence Center. More than 18% of Full Circle's clients' primary problem was alcohol abuse, 57.4% at the Independence Center. In addition, 31.3% of the Independence Center's clients were addicted to both alcohol and drugs.

Information budget may be stopped

The public information component of the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs (LCAD) may be forced by the wayside as the result of the city's and county's money crunch.

The city and county joint budget committee has recommended that LCAD's community awareness program not be funded next year, city-county human services administrator Bob Clark told the LCAD board Thursday. LCAD is one of 12 private agencies receiving city and county funds.

LCAD requested $66,000 in city and county funds for the coming fiscal year; the joint budget committee is recommending $39,500 for the agency for administration and planning functions plus a half-time statistician, Clark said.

"We feel community awareness is one of the key functions of this council," said Rich Jochem, LCAD executive director. During this tight budget year it is "seen perhaps as not a priority."

However, he added, such a program is required for LCAD's affiliation with the National Council on Alcoholism.

The joint budget committee recommended cuts "where the least damage would be done" to prevent "disruption of direct service" to clients, Clark said.

Women's group to demonstrate outside Coors

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) plans a demonstration Saturday outside the South Omaha Coors distributorship.

NOW members charged in a news release that profits from the Coors brewery in Golden, Colo., have been channeled through Adolph Coors into organizations opposing the Equal Rights Amendment. NOW reported the John Birch Society is one such organization.

"Think before you drink," is the slogan NOW has adopted for its anti-Coors stand.

Men charged with robbing hitchhiker

Aurora (UPI) — Two Ohio men were charged Thursday in Hamilton County Court with robbing a Des Moines, Iowa, hitchhiker at knife-point Wednesday.

Authorities identified the Ohio men as Charles Wilder and William Meyers, but their ages and addresses were not given. Wilder and Meyers were being held in the Hamilton County jail.

Authorities said the two men allegedly robbed David Wolz, 23, Des Moines, Iowa, of about $20. Wolz, who was hitchhiking through Nebraska, was robbed on a county road one mile east and one mile south of the Interstate 80 interchange near Aurora, authorities said.

Three other persons in the Ohio car were taken into custody Wednesday night for questioning, but were not charged, officials said. The other three persons might be used as witnesses in the case, officials said.

Bond battling federal over-regulation

Associated Press

Former Missouri Gov. Christopher (Kit) Bond said Thursday his latest interest, for which he was here seeking financial backing, is an extension of his battle to cut through federal red tape.

Bond was in Lincoln in his new role as president of the Great Plains Legal Foundation headquartered in Kansas City, and met with business and civic leaders.

"We speak out for what I think is clearly the majority viewpoint in America today: less federal regulation," Bond said.

Bond, 38, lost his bid for reelection as governor of Missouri, but the Republican said that doesn't mean he has lost interest in politics.

However, his project with the foundation was characterized by him as an involvement with a nonpartisan and nonprofit organization.

The foundation is designed to provide free legal representation for individuals or groups in nine states, including Nebraska, when a case might lead to the foundation goal of "limiting government regulations and their interference with peoples' lives."

Examples of the foundation's work include representation of the Heart of America affiliate of the American Diabetes Foundation in opposition to the federal government's proposal to ban saccharin.

Bond said his organization's position is the opposite of that advanced by consumer advocate Ralph Nader in the saccharin controversy.

"Nader feels it's in the best interests of the public to ban saccharin, but we've shown that it's very definitely not in the best interests of diabetics," he said. "It's another bit of government regulation that the public can ill afford."

The foundation also represents the American Association of Presidents of Independent Colleges and Universities in a lawsuit dealing with sex discrimination guidelines of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Selection of chancellor for UNO may be near

Associated Press

University of Nebraska President Ronald Roskens has indicated that a new chancellor for the university's Omaha campus may be chosen next month.

Roskens said procedures for interviewing the five remaining candidates will be discussed at the Board of Regents meeting slated for June 25 at Scottsbluff.

The five candidates came from an original list of 140 names compiled by a UNO search committee headed by Dale TeKolte, a Northern Natural Gas Co. board vice chairman.

Preliminary inquiries about the five remaining candidates for the post have begun, according to Roskens, who was chancellor of UNO from 1972 until the beginning of this year when he was named to head the university system.

"We have not had any direct contact with any persons," Roskens said. However, Roskens did indicate he hoped the new UNO chancellor could be selected at the July regents meeting.

MEES said the contract went to Oceanic Contractors, a subsidiary of J. Ray McDermott of New Orleans.

Faulty transformer causes power outage in south Lincoln

A technical failure in a transformer caused the power outage that hit most of south Lincoln at 12:55 a.m. Thursday, according to a Lincoln Electric System spokesman.

Pat Smith said the failure in the transformer, owned by the Nebraska Public Power District, shut down eight LES substations, affecting areas from 1st to 70th Sts. and O St. to Old Cheney Rd. Some areas within those boundaries had electricity because they are served by different substations, she said.

Power in the west half of the area was restored at 1:41 a.m. Power in the east half was restored at 2:22 a.m., Ms. Smith said.

Withheld $1.4 million discussed

Associated Press

A Nebraska health official is in Washington, D.C., this week conferring with the state's congressional delegation about potential Medicaid payment cuts to the state.

He is Jim L. Brown, executive director of the Nebraska Health Care Association. His primary interest during the visit is to discuss with lawmakers the decision by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to withhold nearly $1.4 million in payments from Nebraska.

The federal department plans to withhold a total of $142 million from some 20 states because of failure to meet requirements for reviewing the quality and efficiency of nursing home care.

The action was scheduled for July 1, but a U.S. House committee voted earlier this week to give a six-month extension to let states try to comply with the requirements.

Brown and Eldin Ehrlich, head of Nebraska's Welfare Department, say the requirements are unreasonable.

Ehrlich said the situation wasn't the nursing home industry's fault, but was the "procedural impact of a bad federal law." Ehrlich has sent the department's legal adviser to Washington, also in an attempt to deal with the matter.

Mrs. Sutter and daughter Tiffany both learning.

By Patty Beutler

Star Staff Writer

When you're a mother taking music lessons, there's no one to make you practice.

But adults who take up musical instruments appear to need no prodding. They play because they want to, not because they have to.

Sue Brown always had a yen to play the violin. She took lessons as a child, was told she had no talent and stopped soon after. Some 25 years later, the mother of two, began lessons again on the very same violin that discouraged her years before.

Her close friend, Karen Duncan, had signed her son up to study violin by the Suzuki method with Marilyn O'Boyle. "As long as you've found a teacher; see if she'll take two older gals," Sue urged her friend.

They learned Mrs. O'Boyle was reluctant to take on adults because she felt they weren't disciplined enough. The women assured the teacher they were serious about the challenge. "She gave us a month and said we'd probably want to quit," Mrs. Duncan related.

Two years later, the two have advanced many melodies beyond their first song — "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star."

"It's cute when you see a 3-year-old play it," Mrs. Brown says, not inviting any comparison. "But we hung in there, didn't we?"

The two say their teacher has learned from them that the Suzuki method, offered to children as young as 2, is suited for all age levels.

Learning rhythm variations to the chants of "hamburger-hamburger" or "apple-green-apple" didn't bother the adults. The Suzuki method was not tailored to grown-up tastes.

The console Mrs. Brown when she couldn't conquer a chord, the teacher would assure her that the children have trouble at that very same point too. Some comfort, Mrs. Brown remembers thinking.

The leap from nursery rhymes to violin concertos came with weekly two-hour lessons and daily practice sessions. One day the friends discovered they each did their practicing in the kitchen. Waiting for the potatoes to parboil, they'd play a tune or two. "When I'm having trouble with a song, I just imagine my kitchen and get back in my rut," Mrs. Brown admits.

Both women began lessons with the serious intent of learning to play... for themselves, if not for others. "I'm a closet violinist," Mrs. Brown confides. But the fun factor is there and they say that keeps them at it.

"We're friends and we wanted to do something challenging together," Mrs. Brown offers. "And to prove we weren't so old we couldn't learn a new trick," Mrs. Duncan adds with a laugh.

Their goal is to hold a small dinner party and musical evening for their close friends, some of whom don't believe they really can play, and bedazzle their guests with a performance of Bach's concerto for two violins.

Two years ago they wouldn't have believed that time would ever come. Now, it's just around the corner.

Eighteen months into piano lessons, Jan Kauffman isn't so anxious to play for anyone else just now. The memories of her recent recital performance are still too fresh. Instead of a handful of unknowns in the audiences, as there had been the first year, Mrs. Kauffman faced several couples whose children, on her recommendation, were taking lessons from the same teacher.

"I never thought about the recital and that all my friends would be there. I was just undone," she said.

The last to play, following her daughter's flawless performance, she went blank on one of her numbers. "I was just shaking. I even shake for my teacher," she confides. "But I can absolutely bang it out when I'm by myself."

Except at recital times, Mrs. Kauffman finds the piano an instrument of pleasure, not pain. In fact, the antique upright grand keyboard cajoled her into lessons. "The whole idea of the piano was for the kids," she said. "But I loved it so and was frustrated because I couldn't play it." She began lessons even before her children.

Because she's an adult taking lessons, many think she's a serious musician who has been studying for years. When she tells friends she has to be home by 3 o'clock for piano lessons, they all assume she's the teacher.

While some friends find her new hobby strange, she doesn't mind. "It's really therapy for me to sit down and play for my own pleasure," Mrs. Kauffman says.

Her enthusiasm for the piano spread to a friend, Jeannie Sutter, who started lessons this winter with her 9-year-old daughter Tiffany.

One of the two "big kids" — Mrs. Kauffman's terminology — at the recital, Mrs. Sutter remembers her sweaty hands and rising blood pressure. "I was a wreck. I don't know why, but I'm not surprised. I remember being nervous at recitals as a child." She played as a child, but quit when she got active in school. Her recital piece, "Tammie" was a song most people are familiar with. If she made mistakes, she was sure they would be noticed. "I would have felt more secure in a classical piece," she sighed.

Most people don't think they can work lessons into an already busy schedule, Mrs. Sutter said. She found the time. "I knew if I didn't take lessons, I'd never just pick up the playing."

Mrs. Brown (left) and Mrs. Duncan practice concerto.

Press meeting difficult for blinded President

Editor's Note: President Sven Ericson, blinded in an assassination attempt which brought death to Soviet Chairman Kolkov, is undergoing therapy at the White House. His political rivals, unaware that he said nothing of a similar, temporary blindness suffered while he was running for the office, are talking of removing him from the presidency because of his disability. William Safire delves into political webs in the fourth of 10 excerpts from "Full Disclosure."

By William Safire

"You blew it," Hennessy said to the President as he came into the room, nearly out of breath, "you stupid bastard, you blew it."

"I know," Ericson said. "Stop trying to keep from hurting my feelings."

"But you had them eating out of your hands when you got up there. All you had to do was yourself. What got into you?" The President's special counsel knew he would not have been summoned if the President did not want a frank, even a harsh, assessment. There set Mr. Cool himself, feet crossed languidly in the ottoman in front of him, indulging in a little self-criticism from an alter ego.

Detachment was a fine thing, Hennessy thought, but Ericson carried it too far at times, now he was looking at life with a detached retina. Good line. "There you sit," he tried it, "looking at life through a detached retina."

Ericson nodded. "What was worst?"

It was hard to begin. The President already knew each specific instance of error — the mixing up of the African countries, the knocked-over water glass, the gratuitous poke at the Christian Science Monitor's stuffy reporter.

"You weren't in charge, was the worst. President Ericson never blew his cool, never loses his sense of humor, never loses his sense of style. So who do they see? Some blind guy who takes offense, lashes out. That was the worst."

"Yeah," said Ericson. "Damn."

"Look, we haven't talked over something yet." Hennessy had been waiting for the right moment to throw a hand out at his client's head. "Forget all the previous stuff, or what could happen if anybody finds out. Just the cornball question: you think you're doing the right thing?"

"Right thing in what?"

"About not quitting, for Chrissake! Can you handle this job?"

"How the hell do I know, Hennessy? I've never been President before. You know for sure you're going to be a great intimate adviser?"

"That's what I'm being right now." Hennessy thought it would be better to switch to curve balls. "I am sitting in a little room that is graced by the ghost of Abraham Lincoln. I am talking to the 41st President of the United States. And I am bringing up the subject of morality with a capital M, and asking if he really in his heart believes he is capable of discharging the duties of his office. What the hell else is an intimate adviser for?"

Full Disclosure

"Okay," the President said, "let's get into the pros and cons. Cons first."

"That means the pros are going to win," Hennessy predicted.

"Damn right, but I have thought this through. The cons are, first, that I am substantially less able to do this job than I was before. Nobody, including me, knows how much less, or will know for a while."

"Second, the Far Eastern powers could take my blindness to mean that our government is paralyzed, unable to respond quickly to a power play. So whether or not I'm capable of discharging my duties doesn't matter — if the Chijaps think I cannot, it's just as dangerous as if I really could not. That's the big argument against going on."

"Third, there's the psychological problem in the country. The American people want a leader, a strong and confident person at the helm, somebody they can beat up on, who won't crumble. A blind man, or a cripple, can't be that — in a television age, not even FDR could have gotten away with it — he would have been seen and pitted. That's bad for the leader, bad for the led."

"Fourth — well, I forgot the fourth," the President said irritably. "What's another con?"

"Simply that you could be spending so much of your time learning how to cope with blindness that you won't have the time to run the country. Just plain bad management, missed opportunities, mistakes. You could be a relatively lousy President."

"That's the fourth," Ericson agreed. "Now to the pros. First, it's never a good idea to rush into a big decision. I don't have the information yet. Can I cope, discharge my duties? Who knows? Maybe I can. I gave a bad press conference — maybe I'll do better next time. Let's give it a month, then we'll see. But we can't say that, because that's a show of weakness, and it would get everybody having fun with what life will be like in the next administration. I want to make that decision. I don't want it made for me."

Ejicson must act as if there were no chance of his stepping aside; makes sense, thought Hennessy. Provided he was not kidding himself. Possibilities in Washington take on lives of their own, becoming likelihoods and then certainties by a combination of hope and dread and mass communication.

"Second," Ericson went on, "this business of 'stepping aside' is a lot of crap. When you're out, you're out — nobody could run the country with other people's men, without being able to plan for the next year. And the idea of returning to power when you think you're capable — that would only generate a lot of misbehavior at the center. Big disagreement, cabinet fights, uncertainty about who is in charge for how long. That's dangerous, that's real paralysis. So 'stepping aside' is the nice way of saying 'get out for good'."

"Third — you making notes, Hennessy?

Please do. The presidency is not a job you quit in a hurry. It's instability when you do. When you're elected, it's for better or worse all the way — and once people get the idea that presidents they don't like should resign, or don't think are doing the job should resign, then the four-year term starts crumbling at the edges.

"Fourth — that is a practical one — we happen to have a vice president who is an amiable jerk. He was not chosen because he would be a good President, he was chosen because he would be a good vice president. That choice wasn't mine — it was the party's and particularly Bannerman's. Operating at 20 per cent of capacity, I would be a better president than Arnold Nichols operating at 10 per cent capacity."

Hennessy allowed as how that was true.

"Fifth — there are a lot of handicapped people in this country who are pinning their hopes —" the President stopped when Hennessy started humming "Hearts and Flowers". "Okay, I won't use that one unless I have to."

"Sixth, or fifth, or whatever — and Hennessy, don't write this one down — I want to be President. It's been a bitch getting here. I lost my eyesight because I'm President. It owes me something. And it's not going to be as hard being blind, if you can imagine it, so long as I have the most important job in the world. That's selfish, I know —"

"Not selfish," Hennessy interrupted, "irrelevant. What happens to you shouldn't be part of your decision. What the hell are you, anyway, a man or a President?"

"I want to be a President."

"Then stop acting like some kind of human being. You're the chief of state, you may face decisions that the French call 'triage' — deciding who's to live and who's to die. You make your decision for reasons of state and whether it wipes out a city or makes you personally unhappy the rest of your life is irrelevant."

The press was pummeling the President's performance; the initial sympathy was melting into deep concern. Editorialists and columnists were becoming increasingly less vague in their measuring of the President's ability to govern.

The trend appeared to have set in. After next week's news magazines gave it the delayed push, the poll results would start to come in. So much depends on the way the questions were phrased. "Do you think the President should step aside until he is better able to function without his eyesight?" Answer: 80 per cent yes. "Do you think the President's blindness should cause him to be forced to resign?" Answer: 80 per cent no. Lucas Cartwright made a note: Get or own pollsters with the right questions.

Emmet Duparquet was not as prepared as he would have liked to have been, but there had been no time for the exhaustive analysis and preparation that an historic case like this deserved. At his direction, the solicitor general, a respected and non-partisan former law school dean, had whipped together a memorandum of law for the cabinet members, which had been distributed Sunday night.

Essentially, the memo spelled out the procedures to declare inability, stated how the vice president would become acting president the moment he cast his vote with a cabinet majority, and set forth the method the deposed president would have to challenge that decision: the vice president would continue as acting president until Congress decided one way or the other within 21 days.

In the empty cabinet room, Attorney General Duparquet stood behind his chair, to the right of the vice president's chair, across the table from the President's chair, which would be unfilled. The chairs of the recently condensed six-member cabinet were lined three to a side.

"It is now 10:05 A.M., Monday, June 15, and the cabinet is in session. The meeting was called at the request of Secretary Fong for the purpose of discussing the possible inability of the President to discharge his powers and duties."

Fong, secretary of natural resources and the member designated to call this session, began by reviewing the constitutional processes and history on the question of disability of a president.

"If we're wrong," Fong said, well prepared for the point, "the amendment has made it possible for Congress to set it right. If only one-third of the Congress agrees that the president is not disabled, then he gets the presidency back, and no harm done. But if we're right, the president is disabled — and we fail to do our duty — then there is nobody to make the right decision. If we fail here, right now, then we deprive the Congress of the opportunity to give this urgent matter the consideration it deserves."

Score one for them, the attorney general thought, although it might have been a point better made at the end.

"Besides, Andy," Bannerman added, talking at Frangipani but talking to Curtice and Nichols, "we're not 'stripping' him of his office. We're seeing to it that the other man elected by all the people as his running mate steps into his office until Ericson's well enough to come back. And there is a procedure for him to declare his regained ability, and if the Vice President agrees, he gets it back without further ado. If the Vice President doesn't agree, he can go back to the Congress, and if one-third — just one-third — agrees with Ericson, then he gets his presidency back. The presumption that he is not disabled is always on the president's side. If his eyesight clears or his — well, say his head clears, and he can operate without these terrible mistakes — then it becomes our duty to say so publicly and help him get back his job."

Score one for us, the attorney general thought. That was a point he would use on the defense secretary, who looked uncomfortable, probably contemplating the Congressional challenges and the danger of having the presidency in doubt for an extended period.

(NEXT: The Cabinet votes on Ericson's ouster.)

(c) By William Safire

The case, then, was not to be decided by a jury, but by a single judge — one man, George Curtice. The presentation had to be made to him, remembering his wish not to be the one to make the decision.

Shortly after 10, all the other Cabinet members were in the room. The vice president, per protocol, arrived last, and took his seat. Duparquet and the others followed.

The vice president cleared his throat.

Duparquet wished Frangipani would shut up, but said nothing.

Hotel bar good place to cover revolution

San Francisco — Summer days and a world full of revolutions. "Ethiopian Rebels Advance," says the morning paper. "Nigerian Rebels Retreat."

Steaming coffee and the world's woes start the day. The staid London Times had the right idea. When I was living in London I read it each morning.

The whole front page was classified ads. No news.

No wars. No murder or mayhem. Just little three-line ads:

"The League Against Cruel Sports seeks your membership and encouragement. The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests. Write Box 66, The Times."

I only got to one revolution. It was so good I never tried for another.

The revolution was in Guatemala. I covered it from the cool bar in the Pan American Hotel on Sixth Avenue. Just a block from the olive-green presidential palace.

Today's revolutions in the morning papers are mostly in Africa. They sound dangerous and uncomfortable.

Postcard

By Stan Delaplane

If you're looking for a foxhole in a revolution, I recommend the Pan American.

I arrived in a sport shirt — having no time to outfit myself in a proper safari jacket.

I said to a man on a barstool: "What's that you're drinking? What's the revolution all about?"

He said: "A Planter's Punch. I think it's about bananas. Revolutions around here are usually about bananas."

As it turned out, it was a CIA affair.

The revolt was run out of the jungle with an army of less than a hundred patriots. But with a radio transmitter that snarled patriotic threats and was strong enough to reach Boston.

With coffee and the London Times, I got into the day gradually. No shock. Should I join and encourage the League Against Cruel Sports? (Revolution is a cruel sport.)

The sport they're mainly against is fox hunting. When the league hears a fox hunt is coming up — "Yoicks and away!" — they send their members into the field.

The members drop hamburger patties in front of the fox hounds to distract them.

A woman member, when the fox "went to earth," jumped in the foxhole with the fox. Draped the animal with the Union Jack. Defied the huntsmen to do their worst.

The huntsmen rode off in confusion. The woman member got the league's highest medal. The fox went back to robbing chicken roosts.

"Bed-sitters" were advertised on the front page of The Times. (One room for sitting with a bed in it.) A rector in Kent was seeking donations to save a rose garden. "First planted in the time of King Richard."

Commander Winston, DSO, asked interested persons to write him concerning "slavery which still exists in parts of Africa." (Didn't say whether he wanted to buy a slave or free a slave. That's what made it interesting.)

I said to the dachshund: "I can't handle the front page this morning. Let's turn to the 'Pets' column in classified."

About the revolution: The powerful radio scared the president out of the country. A new president came in. He said he was against communism. We all had a last Planter's Punch in the Pan American. Caught the afternoon plane back to Mexico City.

What would your response be?

By B. Jay Becker

You have a part score of 90, and your partner opens with One Heart. What would you respond with each of the following five hands?

1. ♠KQ74 ♥AJ93 ♦J8 ♣J96
2. ♠J983 ♥85 ♦AKJ6 ♣Q72
3. ♠A96 ♥Q94 ♦KQ8 ♣A75
4. ♠KJ95 ♥AQ76 ♦KJ74 ♣10
5. ♠A4 ♥AQ8 ♦AK93 ♣KQ82

1. Two hearts. The meanings of many bids change when a side has a part score. Thus, it would be normal on this hand to respond three hearts (forcing) without a part score, but with the partial you should bid only two hearts. As you are voluntarily raising partner one level past game, two hearts constitutes a moderate slam try.

The chief purpose of the raise, rather than pass, is to cater to those relatively few hands that would offer a chance for a slam. Thus, partner might have twelve tricks. Obviously, partner's only possible opening bid is one heart.

5. ♠3 ♥KQ8742 ♦AKQ5 ♣A5

which would easily produce

2. One notrump. Without a part score, the normal response would be either one spade or two diamonds, but with it only one proper response is one notrump. Ordinarily, one notrump indicates 6 to 9 points, but the range widens to 6 to 12 when there is a part score of 90.

3. Two notrump. This is a clear-cut slam try. A two notrump response to a one bid in a suit ordinarily indicates 13 to 15 points, but with a part score of 90 the range is slightly higher. Partner may pass with minimum values, since the jump response is not forcing.

4. Three hearts. This also invites slam, but again the jump is not forcing. Partner is expected to pass with a minimum opening bid.

Note the difference between this hand and the first one, where two hearts denoted only a moderate interest in slam. Here, with more points and better distribution, slam chances are much brighter. The difference is in degree only; the double raise is in line with the general principle that the more you bid the more you've got.

5. Three diamonds. This bid is 100 per cent forcing and partner must bid again even with a bedrock minimum. Three diamonds is a jump-shift, as distinguished from a jump-raise. Jump-raises are simply limit bids reflecting the implied degree of strength.

Jump-shifts have no ceiling. They may contain as few as 17 points, but also as many as 26 or more points. The opening bidder responds naturally, showing the distributional nature of his hand or extra values if he has them.

Citizens invited to talk on zoning

Lincoln and Lancaster County residents will get a chance next week to say how they think zoning ordinances should be redefined to put the Comprehensive Plan into operation.

Discussion groups will form in the County-City Building cafeteria Thursday at 7 p.m.

"If you've got your own particular hobby horse that you've been riding for a while, and you want it included in the ordinance, now is the time to squawk about it," said Dan Schlitt, Goals and Policies Committee chairman.

But he stressed that this is not the time to try to amend the Comprehensive Plan or re-write some of its battles.

'Baptists ought not always like Jimmy Carter'

Kansas City (AP) — Billy Graham said Southern Baptists ought not feel they must approve of everything Jimmy Carter may say or do. Both the President and the evangelist are Southern Baptists.

The group discussions are part of Phase I in the enacting of new zoning ordinances along lines set up in the Comprehensive Plan.

The purpose of Phase I, expected to be completed in August, is to consider ways in which the zoning ordinance can support or implement the Comprehensive Plan.

In Phase II, actual drafting of the ordinances will take place, followed by action on them by the City Council and County Board.

During both phases, "interim actions" may be taken to prevent development of certain areas before the new zoning ordinances become law.

Graham made his comment at a news conference a few hours before he was to deliver the closing address at the annual assembly of the Southern Baptist Convention.

He told the news conference that any time a religious movement gets high visibility "there is a danger we may compromise convictions or do something we may regret later."

Nebraskans warned of commodity option sales

United Press International

Attorney General Paul Douglas warned Nebraskans Thursday to use caution in the purchase of London commodity options being offered principally by New York and Florida Companies.

The sales, he said, are being made through telephone calls and are followed up by direct mail solicitations.

Douglas said several Nebraskans have complained to his office that high pressure tactics have been used and certain misrepresentations were made regarding the potential profitability of the options.

He said the options are being purchased for the London Commodities Market and are referred to as "London options."

Because of the volatile nature of the Commodities Market, these purchases are not suitable for many persons, the attorney general said, adding that a person should not buy such an option unless he or she is prepared to sustain a total loss of the purchase price.

Such transactions, Douglas said, should be entered into only by persons who are aware of the potential for loss and who understand the nature and extent of their rights and obligations.

The options being offered are not approved or disapproved by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission, a federal agency that licenses and regulates commodity option firms.

Woman pleads innocent to murder charge

Omaha (UPI) — A young Colorado woman pleaded innocent Thursday to a first degree murder charge filed in a motel shooting death of an Iowa clothing salesman.

Mary Larson, 24, Canon City, Colo., appeared before Douglas County District Judge John Murphy who said her trial would be scheduled for sometime next month.

Murphy approved Mrs. Larson's request to be represented by the Douglas County public defender's office.

Mrs. Larson and her boyfriend, Wesley Massey, 34, were charged in the May 23 shooting death of Gary L. Damron, 20, Ankeny, Iowa, at a southwest Omaha motel.

Mrs. Larson allegedly lured Damron to her motel room where Massey was waiting to rob him.

Police said Damron and Massey, a Colorado State Prison escapee, started fighting and Massey subsequently shot and killed Damron.

Mrs. Larson was apprehended shortly after the incident, while Massey was captured four days later at the home of an ex-wife in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The day before his capture, Massey allegedly abducted Richard Gilliam, a federal reserve bank guard in Omaha and released him unharmed after forcing Gilliam to drive him to Denver.

Massey is awaiting extradition from Colorado to Nebraska.

The two were charged in connection with an incident at nearby Lake Mead on the night of Feb. 27, 1976.

According to the trial record, the brothers came upon a camper van. In the van were Meredith J. Edmonds and Reva R. Heitke, both of Chicago.

The brothers knocked on the door asking directions, then produced guns when the van door was opened, according to testimony.

The occupants of the van were robbed, and were forced into the trunk of the stolen car the Sparks brothers were driving. The brothers then stole the van.

Late bogey keeps Palmer out of U.S. Open logjam

Tulsa, Okla. (AP) — A bogey on the 18th hole — the result of a hanging putt that wouldn't fall — kept the legendary Arnold Palmer from joining a group of seven players who fought to one-under-par 69s and a record-setting tie Thursday in the first round of the 77th U.S. Open Golf championship.

Hubert Green, Rod Funseth, Grier Jones, Terry Diehl, Larry Nelson, Tom Purtzer and Argentina's Florentino Molina shared the top spot and set a record for the number of men tied for the lead in the American National championship.

The dynamic Palmer, still exerting that special magic upon his hordes of fans, would have been in that number but for the troublesome 18th that dashed the hopes of so many would-be leaders.

His fourth birdie of the gloomy day, a little flip-wedge to four feet on the 17th hole at the 6,873-yard Southern Hills Country Club, ripped a joyous roar from the throats of the mob. It could have been the same mob that followed the 47-year-old Palmer on his quickstriding, pants-hitching jaunts during his glory years of the 1950s and '60s.

It put him one under par for the day and in a tie for the lead.

On the 18th, listed at 449 yards but playing much longer, Palmer nailed his drive, was short with a two-iron second shot and chipped to 15 feet.

His gallery lapsed into eerie silence — "I almost wanted to hear a sound, a rustle, something," Palmer said — as he stood in knock-kneed concentration over the par-saving putt.

It hit the cup, spun around, a p p e a r e d to drop, then stubbornly hung on the lip. The happy roar turned to a resounding moan.

"It's a very difficult hole," said Palmer. "It plays more like a par five."

That's the score he made on the hole, leading to a 70 that left him one shot back in the tournament he won in 1960.

Defending champion Jerry Pate had a more graphic description of the 18th, which played to an average of about five.

"It's a helluva hole," he said. "It got me."

It got him for a double-bogey six that sent him back in the pack

NBA cuts roster limits to 11 players

Coronado, Calif. (AP) — The National Basketball Association decided Thursday to reduce its roster limits from 12 men per team to 11, but to add a two-man taxi squad for each club.

"We're not trying to cost jobs," emphasized Joe Axelson, general manager of the Kansas City Kings and chairman of the NBA's competition committee. "Actually, we're looking to add a job. We're looking to have 13 people to be under control of a team, rather than 11 or 12."

Under the present agreement with the NBA Players Association, a team must keep 11 men on its roster and has the option of having a 12th player on the club, but may not have a 13th player under its control.

"It does have to be negotiated with the Players Association," Axelson said, "although I don't know why there would be a problem."

Other items recommended by the Competitions Committee and adopted by the NBA Board of Governors during their annual summer meetings at this resort community near San Diego, included:

—Reorganization of the draft of college players along the model of the National Football League draft, where the NBA would rent the ballroom of a New York hotel, each club would have a table at the draft and it would be opened to the public. Currently, the NBA holds its draft by a conference call from league offices;

—Reducing the number of players on the all-star ballot from five to four per club, in order to encourage write-in votes;

—Requiring the 24-second clocks to be located above the backboards;

—Changing the method of breaking ties in the drafting order, which will now be done by drawing rather than on the basis of records between the two clubs.

In other deals, some of them not announced until well after the midnight PDT, trading deadline:

—The Mets sent unsigned Dave Kingman, their occasional home run, more often strikeout artist, to San Diego for reserve infielder Bobby Valentine and young pitcher Paul Siebert, then sent disgruntled reserve infielder Mike Phillips to St. Louis for outfielder Joel Youngblood.

—The Angels traded pitcher Don Kirkwood and a pair of minor leaguers to the Chicago White Sox for starting pitcher Ken Brett.

—The Texas Rangers bought pitcher Dock Ellis from the Oakland A's, traded pitcher Steve Hargan to Atlanta for a player to be named later, swapped third baseman Jim Fregosi to Pittsburgh for pinchhitting utility infielder Ed Kirkpatrick, and sold reserve infielder Rick Auerbach to Cincinnati.

—The Houston Astros sent outfielder Willie Crawford to Oakland for outfielder Dennis Walling and sent catcher-first baseman Cliff Johnson to the New York Yankees in exchange for a pair of minor leaguers and a player to be named later.

The idea of adopting the three-point field goal rule used in the American Basketball Association, which had been recommended by the NBA Coaches Association, was set aside pending the selection of a new league supervisor of officials.

Ak official recruits East Coast horses

By Mark Gordon
Staff Sports Writer

Omaha — Bill O'Connor, Ak-Sar-Ben steward, accomplished two missions on a five-day trip to Belmont Park.

First, and most importantly, he obtained the nominations of 16 horses for Ak-Sar-Ben's two most prestigious races. Secondly, he witnessed the first undefeated Triple Crown winner over when Seata Slew won Saturday's Belmont Stakes.

O'Connor was a natural for Ak-Sar-Ben to send to the New York City track. He's a veteran official who was served in numerous capacities in a lengthy career for the New York Racing Association.

Thirteen nominees were lured to the $100,000-added Cornhusker Handicap at a mile and one-eighth, a July 16 race for 3-year-olds & up and three for the Omaha $100,000-added Gold Cup Stakes, a July 9 race for 3-year-olds.

"They (New York horsemen) were aware of Ak-Sar-Ben and interested in them (big Ak races)," O'Connor said. "But it takes selling to get them here because of the transportation difficulties."

O'Connor said he wasn't certain how many more recruiting trips he would make. "But I believe this shouldn't be the end. There should be more public relations on these races."

The final list of nominees for the Gold Cup Stakes will be June 24 and July 1 for the Cornhusker.

"There's only two things I'm certain of — death and taxes. You're never sure which at 72, a very respectable effort on the deceptively tough, heavily-wooded layout.

"It's the kind of course somebody could shoot 63 on," said Johnny Miller, who had to settle for a 71.

"I'd look for something around a 67 today," prophesized Jack Nicklaus after his early, erratic 74.

It didn't happen.

Diehl had it four under par after seven holes but couldn't bring it home — falling victim to a double bogey on the eighth.

Tom Weiskopf probably came as close as anyone to mastering it — but the course got in its lumps first. Weiskopf went an incredible five strokes over par on the first three holes — double bogey on the first, triple bogey on the second — before finishing with a 71.

Asked if he'd ever finished so strongly after such a poor start, Weiskopf — well known for his displays of temper — smiled and replied: "I don't remember. I usually walk in."

He refused to let the frustration bother him this time, however, and remained in solid contention for the most prestigious of all the world's golf titles. He bounced one off a television tower for his opening double bogey and made triple after hitting a tree and later taking two to get out of a soft bunker on the third.

"This is the Open," he said. "I wasn't very happy, but I knew I had a lot of holes to play. It's going to be a long, hard week. I didn't try to force anything, just let it happen. Everybody is going to make a double bogey, have a bad hole."

Steve Melnyk had one. That old devil 18. He was two under par late in the day and was the apparent leader. But the 18th crushed him with a double-bogey six. After a good drive he pushed a four wood into the right trap, hit out over the green, chipped back and two-putted from 15 feet.

That dropped him back into a tie at 70 with a group that included Palmer, George Burns, Lefty Sam Adams, former tour player Don Padgett, Bob E. Smith, Mike Morley and Al Geiberger, who last week set the all-time tour record with a round of 59.

Geiberger, too, bogeyed the 18th.

Tearful Seaver says goodbye

Associated Press

Tom Seaver bid a tearful farewell to New York Thursday as he and more than two dozen other major leaguers packed their bags and headed for new teams.

Seaver, the Mets' three-time Cy Young Award winner acknowledged as the best pitcher of the past decade, was dealt to Cincinnati Wednesday night for pitcher Pat Zachry, shortstop Doug Flynn and a pair of minor league outfielders.

Zachry, who shared the 1976 Rookie of the Year Award in the National League, wasn't the only hurler to leave Cincinnati. The Reds also shipped unsigned relief ace Rawly Eastwick to the St. Louis Cardinals for minor league reliever Doug Capilla; sent Gary Nolan to the California Angels for minor league infielder Craig Hendrickson and a player to be named later, and traded veteran hurler Mike Caldwell to Milwaukee for a pair of minor leaguers.

Philadelphia also yanked a couple of its pitchers and sent them packing. The Phillies dealt left-hander Tom Underwood to St. Louis for outfielder Bake McBride, the top two names in a five-player swap, and sent right-hander Wayne Twitchell and reserve catcher Tim Blackwell to Montreal for pitcher Dan Warthen and catcher Barry Foote.

In other deals, some of them not announced until well after the midnight PDT, trading deadline:

Brezhnev first in dual role

Moscow (AP) — Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev has reached a new pinnacle of power after a 45-year climb through the Soviet Union's political hierarchy. But even his latest triumph — election as national president while continuing as head of the party — may not be a ticket to complete one-man rule of the country.

Brezhnev was elected president Thursday in a unanimous vote of the 1,500 member national parliament, replacing Nikolai V. Podgorny. The parliament was told that Podgorny, 74, wanted to step down "in connection with his retirement on pension" and he was voted out without further discussion.

Brezhnev, 70, is the first Soviet leader in history to occupy the party leadership and the largely ceremonial presidency at the same time. Although the new job for Brezhnev represents the biggest Kremlin power shuffle since Nikita S. Khrushchev was ousted as premier and party leader in 1964, there is no sign that it will materially alter the way Kremlin decisions are made.

I don't think the new presidency adds one jot to Brezhnev's real power," one

Western diplomat in Moscow said. "It does add to the dignity of his position, but he will continue consulting with the other leaders."

Brezhnev has a reputation — some say it continued power depends on it — of always consulting his fellow members of the party's ruling Politburo before making decisions. Even though he is the nation's undisputed leader on a day-to-day basis, the principle of collective leadership reasserted after Khrushchev's ouster is still party policy.

The economic leadership of the country remains in the hands of Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, 73. After Stalin and Khrushchev, both of whom held simultaneously the party leadership and the premier's job, the Communist party decided that one man should no longer occupy both posts.

Brezhnev also made an uncharacteristic comment May 24 attacking Stalin's ruthless power in what many diplomats saw as an agreement not to be a dictator himself. Brezhnev said some years of Stalin's rule were "darkened by illegal repressions" and "the party has resolutely condemned this practice and it should never be repeated."

Accepting the presidency Thursday, Brezhnev said: "I should like to reassure you, dear comrades, that I shall try to be worthy of the people's trust."

Brezhnev is not expected to have much of an additional workload from the presidency, which in itself carries little power and is an office he held from 1960 to 1964 before becoming party leader. He will have a first deputy president under the new draft Soviet constitution who can handle any work that may arise.

Many observers in Moscow suggest that the reason Brezhnev received the presidency was either to put him on a more equal protocol level with foreign heads of state or to give him a reward — relatively harmless in terms of real power — for his years of service.

The lack of any honors for the outgoing Podgorny suggests he opposed Brezhnev's elevation or had other political disputes with the party leader. But the details of any Kremlin power struggle that took place on the eve of Brezhnev's election may not be known for years.

The election of Brezhnev as president does little to clarify the standing of other members of the 14-man Politburo in regard to who Brezhnev's eventual successor as Soviet leader may be. The most senior other Politburo members are now believed to be Mikhail A. Suslov, the 74-year-old chief party ideologist, and Andrei P. Kirilenko, 70.

Brezhnev's health is a subject of constant speculation in Moscow, fanned by his occasional disappearance from public view without explanation. The last time, he dropped from sight for seven weeks in March and April 1976. He now often wears a hearing aid and, according to foreigners who have met him, sometimes seems to have trouble speaking. His mind seems entirely alert, however.

Brezhnev's takeover of the presidency is the latest step in a gradual process of aggrandizement since he became party leader in 1964. At first he Podgorny and Kosygin observed strict equality, but by 1965 Brezhnev was getting clearly more attention in the officially controlled press.

'Farmers must promote food as bargain idea'

By Lynn Zorachling
Star Staff Writer

Gov. J. James Exon back in Lincoln from a lobbying trip to the White House, said Thursday that more than ever farmers have a "selling job to do."

"One of the problems we have in agriculture," Exon told The Lincoln Star, "is that we have to do a better job selling the people and convincing the American housewife that food is the best buy in the country today."

We've got to quit making apologies and making ourselves a scapegoat every time there is an increase in the price of food.

Americans spend only 17% of their disposable income on food products, the governor said, a figure which he said is the lowest in the world.

Farmers need to change their image, Exon indicated, because they are caught in deep financial troubles which are growing steadily worse.

But the people in Washington who have the power to help change that situation, still hold on to what Exon called a "cheap food policy."

That farm policy, one of the Ford Administration's, is now one of Carter officials', the governor said.

The problem is, some politicians cave into that and say the consumers won't stand for" costlier food.

The governor said consumers would be reasonable and accept higher food prices if the reasons for increased costs were explained.

We've been entirely too timid and have been digging ourselves out of the hole all the time," Exon said.

Exon said he made those remarks to the delegation of 50 farmers and bankers, who accompanied him to Washington, after they failed to persuade Carter officials to boost the current loan rate for wheat and other crops.

Exon said he really didn't expect President Carter's aides to change their minds about boosting price supports. Carter has said he would veto legislation, being considered by the Senate, which would set levels higher than those the administration wants.

Our whole purpose was to bring home to them the problems we're facing out here," the governor said, such as the 1976 crop surplus.

Farmers borrowed heavily to plant crops last year. When the harvest came in, many rejected the price offered for wheat and decided to store the grain and gamble for a better price this year. So far, the gamble hasn't paid off.

When it came time to plant this year's wheat, corn and milo crops, many farmers had to go back to their banker for another loan. Inflation, the need to expand operations and lower prices have combined to create severe credit problems, Exon said.

Exon commended the administration for taking steps last April to make more credit available to farmers under one loan program.

He said Deputy Agriculture Secretary John C. White gave the delegation some good news Wednesday.

White announced a loan program to encourage the construction of storage areas for wet grain. Details on the program are to be outlined soon.

Additionally, Carter aide Bert Lance agreed with Exon that some bookkeeping procedures need to be changed. Exon said current methods give a distorted view of the total cost of the nation's farm programs.

Currently, when farmers receive federal loans, the loans are not marked down as loans, but shown as an expense item, Exon explained.

Everyone talks about the high cost of farm programs. There is no way anyone can get a firm grip on the true costs under this type of financing.

Lance, who is director of the Office of Management and Budget, agreed the procedure was grossly unfair, Exon said.

Some farmers and politicians still think the appointment of consumer advocate Carol Foreman as an assistant secretary of agriculture is unfair, Exon said.

At a luncheon meeting Wednesday, Republican members of Nebraska's congressional delegation again voiced concern that Mrs. Foreman won't adequately represent farmer interests.

Although Mrs. Foreman is not the person he would have picked for the job, Exon said, she has become the "whipping girl" of some Nebraska politicians.

Taking pot shots at Mrs. Foreman "makes good politics in Nebraska," the governor said.

But, he asserted, it can only hurt farmers "if we continue to sit out here and moan and groan and criticize and complain and not even admit that someone representing consumer interests should be in the Department of Agriculture."

Even though the Nebraska farmers, bankers and politicians failed to persuade the Carter administration to raise farm prices now, they're not giving up. Exon said. He has enlisted support from other governors who plan to mount similar pilgrimages to Washington.

"Unless we keep the pressure on, Exon predicted, "they'll tend to forget about us back here."

Bus system's deficit to reach $1.14 million

By Gordon Winters
Star Staff Writer

Next year's budget for the Lincoln Transportation System will increase the bus system's growing deficit to $1.14 million.

The $1.87 million budget approved Thursday by the LTS board in a brief meeting now goes to the mayor for her review. Final action will be taken by the City Council later this summer.

The deficit in the LTS budget must be made up by tax funds. In rough terms the gap is covered by 50% federal funds, 25% state and 25% city funds.

The deficit for the current fiscal year is expected to reach $1.06 million, the first million plus deficit in the board's history.

Because of the climbing deficit, the board has discussed the possibility of raising fares, eliminating unprofitable routes or eliminating service on evenings and Saturday. No action has been taken.

The bus service has experienced a decline in ridership during the current fiscal year of 3%, resulting in a projected revenue of $700,000. Nonetheless, the proposed budget predicts an increase of 5% in ridership, bringing in revenue of $730,000.

Jim Donaghay, manager of the LTS system, said the increase is expected.

because of promotional campaigns that will be undertaken route charges that may pick up new riders and the addition of 13 new buses to the system that will serve new areas.

He also said that the first monthly gain in ridership since November was recorded in May with an increase of b over last year.

On another matter, the LTS board decided to delay a potentially cost cutting reduction of the number of minibuses from three to two.

The board decided to delay the move because street construction is slowing the minibuses. The buses are to be spaced eight minutes apart. Two would increase the usual wait to ten minutes. But Donaghay said the street construction will make the wait even longer.

In addition, board members said a comprehensive study of bus routes will be undertaken late this summer and fall and recommendations on the minibuses could be a part of that overall study.

Changes in the minibus line are being considered since it lost most of its passengers when the downtown loop was established for regular full-size buses.

Board members lamented a lack of suggestions from the public on what to do with the minibuses. Despite news stories in which the board solicited comments only five letters were received, board member Joan Bowers reported.

Who are the citizen watchdogs who will administer Nebraska's new "sunshine" law regulating campaign financing, lobbying and conflict of interest?

A variety of Nebraskans balanced in most respects except geography.

There's a homemaker, a retired judge, a University of Nebraska economics professor, a former businesswoman and accountant, an attorney and the director of special projects on NU's Lincoln campus.

Three are men and three are women.

Three live in Omaha and three reside in Lincoln.

Terry Carpenter of Scottsbluff was nominated by Gov. J. James Exon, but failed to receive legislative confirmation.

Four are Democrats, two are Republicans.

And all of them have already done what they will now ask office

Senate rebuffs Carter stands on Korea, Cuba

Washington (UPI) — The Senate refused Thursday to support President Carter's plan to withdraw U.S. ground troops from South Korea — or to allow the sale of medical supplies and food to Cuba.

It was a double legislative defeat for Carter who has announced he will withdraw about 33,000 ground troops from South Korea within four to five years and wants to begin improving relations with Cuba.

The twin actions came as the Senate worked on a $1.7 billion authorization bill for the State Department, the U.S. Information Agency and the Board for International Broadcasting in fiscal 1978.

The Cuba issue disappeared quietly when Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., withdrew his section in the bill which would have authorized the sale and transfer of medical supplies, agricultural and food commodities to Cuba.

But the Korea troop issue triggered a lengthy and divisive debate.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd urged his colleagues to approve an amendment slightly toned down from the version in the bill — which would express support for Carter's plan to reduce U.S. troops in South Korea. It purely expressed the sense of the Senate and did not force the president to do anything.

The bill originally would have affirmed Carter's intention to withdraw all troops — stationed there since the Korean War — in four or five years.

But Byrd's substitute ran into widespread opposition among Democrats and Republicans.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., bluntly said, "I am convinced that this action could lead to war in South Korea."

Others, including Senate GOP leader Howard Baker, said the Senate was acting before committees had fully heard testimony on the impact and consequences of the withdrawal and that the Senate was giving Carter full authority and abandoning its own powers.

"We are effectively putting the stamp of approval on the President's announced plan," Baker said. "And I don't think we know enough about that."

The revised amendment, which was adopted 79-15, deleted any reference to Carter's withdrawal plan and said simply that "Congress declares that U.S. policy toward Korea should continue to be arrived at by joint decision of the President and Congress."

Nebraska Sen. Carl Curtis voted not to adopt the amendment, while Sen. Edward Zorinsky voted with the majority of 79 votes in favor of the amendment.

Court rules religion can't guarantee day off

Washington (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled on Thursday that employees don't have a legal right to take a day off from work for religious reasons.

The case involved a Trans World Airline worker who wanted to take Saturdays off for religious reasons. But the court said that to require TWA to give the employee Saturdays off when his seniority did not afford him that privilege would "involve unequal treatment of employees on the basis of their religion."

Specifically, the court's 7-2 decision held that employers are not required to give an employee certain days off to accommodate religious beliefs when a union seniority system stands in the way or when the accommodation would result in preferential treatment for that worker.

The result is a legal setback for the millions of persons throughout the nation whose religions dictate that they not work on particular days of the week. It has particular impact for those whose religions observe any day other than Sunday because American work schedules free most persons from work on Sunday.

Bryant is greeted by rallies

Houston (UPI) — Singer Anita Bryant was almost upstaged Thursday in a controversial performance at an attorney's convention by opposing rallies by homosexual rights advocates and a Baptist preacher.

The Florida orange juice promoter, who was paid $7,000 for an upbeat "Broadway song and dance" show at the State Bar of Texas' dinner, shunned invitations to debate her gay opponents or to attend the Christian rally held in her honor.

But Miss Bryant, who became a national figure by leading a successful drive to overturn a Miami, Fla., gay rights ordinance, planned to meet reporters Friday after a closed prayer breakfast.

Meanwhile, the growing size of the opposing camps was apparent as Southern Baptists meeting in Houston City passed anti-segregation resolutions and gay rights leaders biled Bryant as the starting point of a counter-attack.

During lunch, gay leaders planned an evening rally followed by a march, carrying candles and wearing arm bands, past the hotel where Miss Bryant was hired to sing. The march was to climax with a rally in a nearby park.

The Rev. J. C. West of San Antonio, Tex., started an opposing rally in the same park at the same time.

Carter reported not budging on water projects

Washington (UPI) — President Carter indicated to midwestern and southern lawmakers Thursday he may not accept a Senate "compromise" that would deny funds to only half the 16 controversial water projects he wants to kill.

Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan., said Carter "certainly implied" at a White House meeting with midwestern members of Congress that even the proposed dropping of eight more projects from a public works money bill would not be acceptable.

"He implied he would stand fast and that if (the Senate proposal) was not acceptable," she said.

"I hope he sticks to it."

Rep. Butler Derrick, D-S.C., a leader in a nearly successful House attempt to cut all 16 projects from the budget, said Carter told southern lawmakers at another White House meeting there was a "strong likelihood" he would veto a public works money bill even if the eight projects were dropped.

Derrick said Carter, asked about a Senate subcommittee's proposed compromise, said he already had compromised when he reduced to 17 his original list of more than 30 projects.

Derrick joined in the unsuccessful House attempt to knock out 16 of the controversial projects still in the bill, even though they included the Richard B. Russell Dam project — part of which lies in Derrick's district.

Assistant Senate Democratic leader Alan Cranston of California said earlier he believed

Carter would accept the compromise worked out Wednesday by the Senate Public Works Appropriations subcommittee.

But Cranston told reporters he had no assurance from the White House Carter would accept the bill even if the Senate version wins out.

"I don't have any direct word that he's ready to compromise," said Cranston. "But I don't think he's going to demand 100% of what he's after."

For Carter to demand that work stop on all the projects would be "highly injurious" to his relations with Congress, Cranston said.

In a move designed to avert a showdown with Carter, the Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., recommended work stop on eight projects that the House refused to kill. Stennis made it clear to reporters afterward that the decision was intended to prevent a veto of the $10.5 billion public works money bill.

Just the day before, the House refused by a vote of 214 to 194 to half funding for 16 of 17 projects that Carter wanted stopped. The 17th — the Grove Lake Reservoir project in Kansas — was abandoned in committee and no attempt has been made to revive it in either the House or the Senate.

The projects stricken by the Senate subcommittee were Lafarge Lake, Wis.; Lukfata Lake, Okla.; Meramec Park Lake, Mo.; Yatesville Lake, Ky.; Fruitland Mesa, Colo.; Savery-Pot Hook, Colo. and Wyo.; Narrows Unit, Colo., and Oahe, S.D.

11 wounded in Soweto shootings

Johannesburg, South Africa (AP) — Police shot and wounded 11 blacks in two segregated townships Thursday night on the anniversary of bloody rioting in Soweto, authorities said.

Police opened fire on youths throwing stones from behind roadblocks in Soweto, the nation's largest black township and scene of rioting last June that set off months of racial upheaval in which 600 blacks and three whites died.

Nine blacks, all but one of them teen-agers, were hospitalized in Soweto. In southern Cape province, two blacks were shot by police after a group was arrested for holding illegal gatherings.

The arrest followed looting and arson in the rural black township of Kabah.

Brig. Jan F. Visser, white police chief of Soweto township 10 miles southwest of Johannesburg, confirmed the shootings in five different areas Thursday evening between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m.

"The police held back as long as they could, but when their lives are endangered, they have to protect themselves," Visser said. "We had hoped not to have to use force."

Visser said police were forced to open fire after being heavily stoned trying to remove roadblocks set up by blacks as residents returned from work. Students had called a work boycott to mark the anniversary but thousands of the 250,000 black commuters reported to their jobs.

Saboteurs blasted two sections of rail lines near Soweto early Thursday, injuring a white policeman. Blacks in a township 40 miles east of Johannesburg stoned a police car, a train and a delivery truck.

Police used tear gas and new riot control equipment to disperse crowds in several townships near Johannesburg and Pretoria during the daylight hours when no shootings were reported.

Many of Soweto's one million residents dressed in mourning and packed churches and community centers to pray for the victims of last year's racial violence.

Civil liberties union backs child porno bill

Washington (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union has endorsed a bill designed to check the growing business of child pornography.

The ACLU, a traditional defender of the First Amendment protection of free speech, had previously said another child pornography bill was unconstitutional.

The bill receiving the ACLU endorsement Thursday would make it a crime to use any child to produce pornographic materials. Violation could bring up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

"Because the proposed legislation carefully distinguishes between production and distribution of such materials, the ACLU supports the bill," said Martin Guggenheim, an attorney with the Juvenile Rights Project of ACLU.

The bill by Sens. John C. Culver, D-Iowa, and Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., "seeks only to regulate conduct, not constitutionally protected speech. By making criminal the use of children in the production of pornographic materials and not attempting to regulate the distribution or dissemination of materials," the bill meets constitutional requirements, Guggenheim said.

"Moreover, the bill properly fills a gap in existing law as no federal statute directly prohibits the production of such materials."

Guggenheim testified before a Senate judiciary subcommittee. Previously, ACLU official Heather Florence had testified against a House bill that prohibits distribution of certain types of pornographic material. She said such a bill would be unconstitutional.

Guggenheim repeated the objections to the Senate version of this bill, saying, "The First Amendment prohibits restraints on speech even when that speech is offensive or of little or no value," he said.

The bills are aimed at a problem that has shocked congressional panels in recent weeks, child pornography.

Culver said his subcommittee had found "a picture of a shocking form of child abuse taking place across the nation. Young girls as well as boys are involved in the production of pornographic materials and prostitution."

"Most often these children are tricked or enticed into these activities by adult predators using gifts, food, drugs or threats of violence. This activity and the materials it produces have grown into a multi-million dollar trade threatening the well-being of thousands of children," he said.

Also testifying was Deputy Attorney General Peter Flaherty, who said the department also wants to find a constitutional way to end the business of child abuse.

He said the Culver-Mathias bill, with some small changes in wording, probably could do this. "The further you go, the more you run into problems with constitutional challenges. Even with this bill, I'm sure we'll run into challenges."

Flaherty said a federal law dealing with child pornography is preferable to the 36 state laws and five federal laws now dealing with the subject in various ways.

Farm view disagrees on energy

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Speakers at an energy conference sponsored by the American Farm Bureau Federation have attacked the Carter administration's energy proposals as emphasizing conservation at the expense of production.

The Farm Bureau wants to keep agriculture's high priority for energy, especially natural gas which is used to make fertilizer and to run irrigation pumps, among other things.

"Our energy problems will be easier to solve if we let the market work rather than if we refuse to do so. There must be recognition that agriculture is an efficient user of energy and that there is no readily available substitute for agriculture's special energy needs," said Robert Delano, vice president of the farm bureau.

Nebraska farm delegation returns empty-handed

The Nebraska delegation which met with administration and congressional leaders in Washington Wednesday to talk about economic problems on the farm came away empty-handed, at least so far as promises for increased loan rates on this year's crops are concerned.

If the delegation made any dent at all, it was in demonstrating once again the persistence of the agricultural sector in demanding equitable treatment by the government, and in opening up direct dialogue between federal officials and a greater number of farmers, bankers and agribusinessmen. Gov. Jim Exon's leadership and connections have been most helpful in this regard.

But Nebraskans must understand by now that the Carter administration:

— Apparently will not be persuaded that its estimates of production costs for various crops are too low.

— Will be most reluctant to permit an increase in loan rates or other price supports much above what it has already suggested; thus, a veto of current farm legislation is a certainty. In its efforts to cut spending, the administration believes that a costly (which at the same time could be described as adequate) farm program is out of the question.

— Does not differ from most recent administrations in assigning the wishes and needs of the farm sector lower priority than non-farm business and the consumer bloc — demonstrating once again the diminishing political clout of the agricultural sector and government's usual insistence on an inequitable cheap food policy which ultimately could have disastrous consequences.

The Nebraska contingent's trip was not a complete loss; it never hurts to keep the lines of communications open and to keep the pressure on.

But political reality had already dictated, in our estimation, that changing the administration's mind on loan rates for this year's crops or for gaining other concessions, for that matter, would be akin to moving mountains.

We hope to be pleasantly surprised.

But it would appear that the more things change (like administrations), the more they remain the same.

Trampled human rights

The world is witnessing some excellent examples of part of what the Helsinki agreement of two years ago is all about. In setting forth agreements on East-West accords, the Helsinki document established basic understandings on human rights.

Just this week, the Soviet Union flagrantly violated the human rights of a U.S. journalist in that country, Robert C. Toth of the Los Angeles Times. Toth had been questioned, for up to six hours in one session, by Soviet authorities without any knowledge of the purpose of the inquisition.

He was, of course, without legal counsel in the matter. After making their point with Toth they let him leave the country. Anything more than that would have been a serious international risk for Russia.

The Russians are probably reacting to two things. One, the review now started in Belgrade of the Helsinki agreement is not the Russian's cup of tea. While a signatory to the agreement, the Russians have paid no attention to the document.

Two, U.S. President Jimmy Carter has undoubtedly hit the Russians where it hurts in his insistence upon worldwide recognition of human rights. Again, the Russians are intent upon doing exactly as they please and resent any outside influence upon them.

Toth is an example to the rest of the world of just how independent the Russians believe themselves to be. With emphasis throughout the world on human rights, the Soviets go on stage to denounce such rights.

It is one of the U.S.S.R.'s bully tactics and it is hoped that it works about as well as such things have in the past for them. Outside of their own sphere of military control, the Russians have not managed to scare anyone into anything.

It is not that their military power is questioned or not respected. Certainly it is. But the world knows that it cannot accede to such dictatorial tactics if freedom is to have any future at all.

Communist leaders in Russia hope to squelch the west's emphasis on human rights by stomping those rights in the ground. It is hoped the free nations have no part of the affair and continue their pressure on behalf of humanity everywhere, including behind the Iron Curtain.

Everyone else is out of step

Ralph De Toledo

The people who won't allow Kissinger a difference of opinion, our Carl says, are the same ones who bleat about academic freedom.

Very true. But I recall a reporting trip to Rhode Island taken by Max Yergan, a black like Carl Rowan, and Rep. John Ashbrook of Ohio, and myself some 10 years ago. We traveled around the country, we talked to many people, and we set down on paper what we had seen and heard. But Rowan consigned us to outer darkness, calling us "racists" and worse because he disagreed with what we said.

I recall the old song which told of a "Bar-num and Bailey world, just as phony as it can be," and I think of other cases, other examples.

President Carter made much of human rights.

He spoke out against Chile because it holds a couple of dozen political prisoners in the kind of durance vile which includes pleasant quarters, television sets, and visits from the Organization of American States to make sure that they are not mistreated.

But the President's devotion to human rights suddenly vanishes when it comes to Cuba — the most viciously repressive state in the Western Hemisphere, with thousands living in agony in the Isles of Pines concentration camp. If friendly relations with Cuba were in the American national interest, Mr. Carter's sudden blindness would be understandable. But it is Cuba which needs American recognition desperately, and the Soviet Union — spending $3 million a day to prop up the Cuban economy — which will be the major beneficiary of "normal" U.S.-Cuban relations.

What it reminds me of is the old Quaker saying "Everyone is crazy except thee and me, and I have my suspicions about thee."

Even Comrade Brezhnev must have blushed at that "dictatorship of the proletariat" chestnut.

In the Soviet Union, the rich get richer and the poor get poorer at a faster rate than the "decadent" West, and the proletariat can't blow its nose without permission of the cultist commissars and intellectuals who run the show with an iron hand.

But the "state of the whole people?" The Armenians and the Volga Germans, and the Mughals — all third-class citizens in a state in which everyone else is a second-class citizen. We should send Sen. Hayakawa to Russia to teach them semantics.

Zany did I say? On Saturday nights I turn on a local TV talk show to hear Carl Rowan, once a Kennedy administration stalwart and now a newspaperman, holding forth against Columbia students and faculty because they blocked appointment of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to a teaching post.

Haig optimistic about peace

are doing in the NATO alliance, rather than on what they are doing in Moscow and the Warsaw Pact countries.

— For example, we have to work out our problems in the Eastern Mediterranean with Turkey and Greece. Turkey, he insisted, has a standing army of 500,000 men and can quickly call up another 750,000. Failure to resolve this allied problem in Greece and Turkey, he thought, could be extremely serious.

— The major problem with the Soviets is not on the central front of Europe — despite the Soviet military build-up in the Warsaw Pact countries — but on the periphery, in the Eastern Mediterranean, the Middle East, and in Africa.

— The Soviet military build-up is not "mindless." Ever since the "missile crisis" in Cuba, they have been correcting their strategic weaknesses, and are now working on getting bases on both sides of Africa along the oil transport lines from the Middle East to Western Europe and the Americas.

— Meanwhile, the Communist political challenge in Italy, France, Spain and Portugal has to be watched and handled very carefully, for there is as much and maybe more of a psychological problem among the European peoples than a military problem.

Haig said he thought some progress was being made in NATO despite the obvious political problems. He believed the days of separate training and maneuvers by the national units was over and that the integrated central command was much better. The standardization of weapons and ammunition was a slow process, he said, but President Carter was trying to minimize "national competitiveness" and pressing the Pentagon to contract for new weapons manufactured in Europe.

Meanwhile, he thought that the controversy between the U.S. and the Soviet Union over "human rights" had not only clarified the philosophic conflict between East and West, but had persuaded other members of the Alliance that they must improve the military defenses of the West.

It was important, Haig suggested, to hold the line in Europe but not to lose sight of what he thought was the major threat of Soviet policy around the edges of the Euro-Asian continent.

The Soviet Union was now, he observed, not only a super power, but "the last of the empires." It discovered in the Cuban missile crisis and the African conflicts of the '80s, that it did not have the transportation systems to use its power on a global scale. It was working on this problem steadily but not recklessly, Haig said. It had increased its power on land and on sea, but still needed bases beyond the internal seas of the Baltic and the Mediterranean to operate effectively on world scale.

The NATO problem, Haig suggested, was to recognize that this was a natural development for a new "world power" and to counter it on the periphery as NATO had countered it in the center of Europe.

Haig thought this could be done if the Western democracies were not weakened by Communist coalitions or by conflicts over economic problems within the alliance.

Turkey seemed to be on his mind more than anything else. As an anchor of the alliance in the Eastern Mediterranean, when Israel was in a state of political transition and confusion, and when Moscow was trying to take advantage of the NATO divisions, Turkey, he said, was vital to the defense of the West and everything possible should be done to resolve its conflict with Greece over Cyprus.

Most of these problems were political, Haig said, and therefore beyond his authority, but the Soviet Union had as many problems in the East as NATO had in the West, and he was confident that a political as well as a military balance of power could be maintained.

If, he concluded, NATO remained a democratic coalition and kept its eye not only on the central front in Europe but on the rising political problems in the Middle East and Africa, then, he believed, the alliance could go on into the '80s without the fear of a major conflict between the super powers.

Protection in the area of sexuality

Ellen Goodman

Though half the population of 21 million teenagers between 15 and 19 are sexually active, we have continued to make it difficult for them to get information about birth control and to buy contraceptives.

In the name of "sex prevention," this negligence has been at least partially responsible for the rise in teenage pregnancies. Today one out of every ten teenage girls becomes pregnant every year, a rate higher than that in 18 other developed nations.

Last week the Supreme Court took a first major step in removing some of the barriers between teenagers and birth control. They struck down a New York State law that banned the sale of non-prescription drugs to anyone under 16 years of age. At the same time they ruled against two other provisions in the statute: one that said only licensed pharmacists could sell these contraceptives, and another that prohibited companies from advertising or displaying them. There are similar laws in more than 20 other states that will also be affected by this ruling.

And yet, we have made an exception. The adolescents of this country — those who can bear and be children at the same time — have been left unprotected in the area of sexuality. For the past several decades we have chosen to pretend that we can prevent teenagers from being sexually active rather than protect them from the worst consequences of this age-gap — pregnancy.

In the decision, the 7-2 majority rejected the old argument of the State of New York that freely available contraceptives would increase sexual activity. They also overruled the dissent of Justice Rehnquist, who fumed about "the right of commercial vendors of contraceptives to peddle them to unmarried minors through such means as window displays, and vending machines located in the men's rooms of truck stops."

Justice Rehnquist's fantasies aside, the point is to bring contraceptives to sexually active teenagers, to turn the old barriers into conduits. Not to promote sex, but to deal with its reality. Short of locking the entire teenage population in their rooms, the only thing that adults can do is to "help" them avoid the most permanent and disastrous of consequences.

Each year more than one million teenagers become pregnant. Of these, 30,000 are under the age of 15. Teenagers have a third of all the abortions in the country (yet how little we hear from the anti-abortion groups about fostering birth control).

Twenty-one percent of pregnant teenage girls give birth out of wedlock, with 87 percent keeping their babies. Arthur Campbell wrote in the Journal of Marriage and the Family about these girls: "Suddenly she has 90 percent of her life's script written for her.

Teenagers give birth to 600,000 children every year, which means that one out of every five American children has a teenage mother. But more importantly, less than a third of these mothers wanted babies. They became pregnant largely out of ignorance about, and lack of access to, birth control methods.

Ignorance and inaccessibility — these are issues that the adult population can deal with in terms of protecting the children.

The Supreme Court decision will help. But as Dr. Daniel J. Callahan wrote in a Planned Parenthood study of teenage pregnancy: "At the very least teenagers should have as much knowledge of sex, as many and as good services available, as do adults... The most we can do is to help them avoid those things we know will hurt them, help to reduce the impact of those acts (even of folly) which they have already done, help them, in a word, to make it through the teenage years with as little lasting harm as possible."

award-winning drama about prison life, "Short Eyes," so realistic that when it was brought here and played before an audience at a local prison, the inmates wanted to know what institution the actors were serving time in.

His sequel, "The Sun Always Shines for the Cool," which picks up the lives of the ex-cons out on the street some years later, is world-premiering here now, and it is just as powerful as "Short Eyes." The play says more about the causes, nature and execution of urban street crime in America than a library of academic dissertations on the subject, mostly because Pinero, in addition to being an unusually gifted writer, has himself been there and back.

His plays are no weak, liberal, weeping excuse for criminal behavior; no glorification of street life; no doctored-up version of what it's like to be on the hustle. His characters are violent, mean, bound by no code except their own, willing to do almost anything for the money it takes to have the respect of their own. And partly because no excuses are made for them, they are very, very real people, living in a world better understood because of Pinero's writing.

Street life is something hard for outsiders to grasp; a world apart, sliding in and out of mainstream vision only when it victimizes the innocent; operating under its own complicated rules; speaking its own language; administering its own "justice."

And understanding is the key. You don't fight something you don't understand, and win. Few law enforcement officers have that understanding, almost no one else does.

Pinero's plays, if they get the kind of attention they deserve, could prove to be a good lesson on the long road to an education we badly need.

U.S. should not shut up on rights

to induce increased emigration from Russia.

Today, we are on the strategic defensive; communism is subverting Europe and moving into Africa; we no longer have the big stick with which we can speak softly. Without quiet power and the will to use it, quiet diplomacy loses its effectiveness.

That is why it is so important to call the Soviets to account for their broken promises of Helsinki, and to show the world the difference in human terms between totalitarian and free societies. At the moment, the power of our example is about the only power we have going for us.

The ferocity of the Russian reaction to long-overdue criticism should point up to our own pragmatists that Soviet goals are neither a relaxation of tension nor a genuine nuclear parity. Their goal, now as always, is world domination through a steady expansion of communist power.

In the face of that relentless challenge, America policy ought not to vacillate between quiet diplomacy one day, fervent embracings of dissidents the next day, and gee-you-got-me wrong the day following.

Our consistent policy ought to be to remind the world and ourselves of the advantages of freedom over the systems of totalitarianism, to penalize despotism whenever possible, to reward a turning toward more representative government wherever possible. In that struggle, publicity is to our advantage; pragmatic quiet is to the advantage of our adversaries.

In Belgrade this week, the Soviets are offering us a deal: if we shut up about human rights, they will reduce their increased repression and harassment. If we do not, the suffering they inflict is supposed to be all our fault.

Sorry, that's a bad deal. Brezhnev is testing Carter today just as Khrushchev tested Kennedy in Vienna in the first year of his presidency. Then, the Soviet assessment of American weakness led to the brink of war a year later; one can hope Carter has learned Kennedy's lesson.

"When may a truth go into cold storage," asked pragmatist William James, "... and when shall it come out for battle?"

The Soviets demand that we keep the truth about freedom in cold storage, and it is a pity that so many of our opinion-makers are adding to the pressure on the new President at such a crucial moment.

Absent a power balance or mutual peaceful intentions, pragmatism is a loser. This is the time to explore the possibilities of moralism: What is good can work.

Sobbing mother testifies

By Jim Camden
Star Staff Writer

A sobbing 19-year-old mother told a jury in U.S. District Court Thursday that her daughter was taken away from her for two months after she was arrested by Broken Bow police.

Teressa Oleson Janski said she returned to her Broken Bow apartment on the afternoon of July 15, 1975, to find her home in shambles. City police officers and a state patrolman arrived shortly after and arrested her, but would not tell her why, Mrs. Janski said.

After police took pictures of the inside of her house she and her daughter Valerie, then 2 years old, were taken to the Broken Bow police station. Mrs. Janski said she was put in jail and not told what would happen to her daughter.

"I was very scared," she said, crying. "That night I was thinking, 'Why did it happen to me? What would happen to Valerie?'

Valerie was put in a series of foster homes and Mrs. Janski could not regain custody of her until September.

Mrs. Janski was arrested for possession of a controlled substance but the charges later were dropped when state laboratory reports showed substances found in the apartment were not illegal drugs. Mrs. Janski said pills taken from her apartment by police were prescription medicine for a rash.

According to testimony at the trial, a former boyfriend of Mrs. Janski apparently broke into her house while she was out of town and scattered garbage and food around the apartment.

Police had been called after James E. Peister, Broken Bow city manager and housing authority director, had received complaints of a strange odor coming from the apartment. Police Chief Robert Jatczak discovered what he thought to be four marijuana seeds and some other drugs in the apartment.

Although charges against Mrs. Janski were dropped one week later, Valerie remained in foster homes. At a hearing in August 1975 to determine Mrs. Janski's fitness as a mother, pictures of the vandalized apartment were introduced as evidence against her. Valerie was declared a neglected child.

Mrs. Janski said she was depressed while her daughter was away from her. "When they took her, that was the end," she said. "There wasn't a day that passed that I wasn't crying."

Mrs. Janski got her daughter back Sept. 23 after another hearing.

After the arrest, she also said her friends and family shunned her because they thought she was a drug addict.

Mrs. Janski is suing for $10,000 in damages for the incident. U.S. District Court Judge Warren K. Urbom dismissed the suit against the police officers but ordered attorneys for Peister and Jatczak to present a defense.

Judges plan to help on crime code

Lincoln (AP) — The Nebraska District Judges Association has decided to form a committee to advise legislators in the 1978 general session on the criminal code.

Franklin County District Court Judge Ronald Reagan, chairman for the association, said the committee would help with wording changes in the revised code that could cause problems.

Reagan said he thinks it is important that lawmakers get input because the district court judges will have to interpret the revised code.

He said the general consensus seems to favor a criminal code that would classify crimes with sentence limits. The revised code does. He said certain portions of the code, such as the penalty for possession of marijuana, have sparked a debate. But, Reagan said, most judges believe police is properly protected by the law and the judges are not involved.

Reagan commented that the second part of the judicial con-

More Medicaid money in jeopardy

The Lincoln Star

Friday, 6/17/77 ■ Page 7

By Michael J. Bugaj
United Press International

If the state fails to inspect several nursing homes by June 30, Nebraska may lose another quarter's allotment of federal Medicaid funds.

Nebraska already is scheduled to lose nearly $1.4 million in Medicaid funds next month because at least one nursing home failed to comply with federal Medicaid statutes.

Federal officials are pressuring the state to make inspections on five nursing homes, or face losing additional federal funds.

The five nursing homes are the Beatrice State Development Center, the Bethesda Care Center at Exeter, the Valley View Care Center in Nebraska City, the Orchard Hill Nursing Manor of Omaha and the St. Vincent's Home for Aged in Omaha.

However, state and nursing officials contend that three of the homes underwent recent inspections and were approved. The St. Vincent's Home has been closed and Orchard Hill is in the process of being closed, according to the State Welfare Department.

Welfare Deputy Director Derald Lembrich said his department has been informed that the five homes must be inspected by June 30, but, he said, he "could not understand why these (five) particular homes were named."

Lembrich admitted the Orchard Hill home has a "problem," but the home is being emptied of its patients.

"All the clients have been removed, except one or two. They have been relocated to other nursing homes," he said.

Several areas of the Beatrice Home were cited for inspection by the June 30 deadline, including two hospital annexes, a cottage area and four wards.

However, Lembrich said the cited areas were inspected this spring.

"They were re-certified in the proper time frame, they were on schedule. I don't know what the problem is, but it may be a goof-up of records in Washington," he said.

Lembrich said the Bethesda-Exeter and Valley View homes also were inspected on time.

Albert Inman, president of Valley View Care Center, said doctors of the American Academy of General Practice have called for a moratorium on signing certain Medicaid certificates and may have jeopardized the federal funding.

"The doctors decided to cut down on paper work. We were told we could lose our funds if this didn't get corrected."

Inman said at least one doctor refused to sign 10 "re-certification" certificates. The doctor alleged to have refused to sign the certificates was in Canada and unavailable for comment.

"Doctors are supposed to fill out these forms on Medicaid patients, listing the medications the patients are on. They are required to do this every 60 days."

Another official of the Valley View home, who requested anonymity, said the home this week had an unannounced inspection. "The (State) Health Department said they came on a complaint. Usually they give notice," she said.

She said the home, built in 1975, had a brief inspection by the fire department on "one or two little things," but as far as she knew, the home had met all inspection requirements.

Dr. Henry Smith, State Health Department director, said about 90% of routine nursing home inspections are announced. "But when we receive a complaint, the normal procedure is to inspect without notice," he said.

David Burdine, president of the Bethesda home, said the Exeter facility was inspected in the last "four to six months."

Gerald Griepentrog, state coordinator of the Beatrice home, said the facility "recently had been inspected by the State Health Department. The Beatrice home was approved," he said.

Auto homicide to be charged

United Press International

The Douglas County attorney's office said Thursday a Lincoln man would be charged with misdemeanor motor vehicle homicide in the early morning traffic death of an Omaha motorcyclist.

Omaha police said Jerome A. Geiger, 36, was killed when his eastbound motorcycle collided with a westbound car that was turning left.

Deputy County Attorney Tom Brown said the driver of the car, Alex J. Borchardt, of Lincoln, who will be 36 today, had a blood alcohol content of .10, the minimum under Nebraska law for intoxication.

Brown said Borchardt would be charged with misdemeanor motor vehicle homicide. Brown said police reports showed Geiger also had been drinking, but blood tests were incomplete.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Pacific St. and I-880.

In addition, the State Patrol said Scott O. Jones, 21, of Chappell, was killed in a two-car crash 9.7 miles east of Chappell on U.S. 30. The patrol said the accident occurred just after Jones had passed another car on a hill.

The driver of the westbound car, Ervin A. Dirks, 62, of Chappell, was in fair and stable condition at an Ogallala hospital Thursday. Dirks was to be transferred to a Denver hospital.

Omaha home all alone in original order

By Regina J. Hills
United Press International

The Nebraska Welfare Department Thursday said the Orchard Hill Nursing Manor in Omaha is "in the process of closure" because the facility apparently failed to comply with federal standards.

However, one nursing home official said that the patients are being removed from Orchard Hill in order to save the state nearly $1.4 million in federal Medicaid funds.

Orchard Hill was at the heart of a recent U.S. Health, Education and Welfare Department decision to withhold from Nebraska nearly $1.4 million in Medicaid payments.

Derald Lembrich, deputy director of the State Welfare Department, said Orchard Hill was "the only one (nursing home) in the original sanction order." He said regional HEW officials at Kansas City, Mo., Thursday confirmed that Orchard Hill was the only Nebraska nursing home named in the initial HEW order.

H.G. Wandel, of Fremont, who said he is Orchard Hill's temporary administrator, confirmed that the State Welfare Department had ordered the removal of welfare patients to save the $1.4 million. But, Wandel said, the home is not being closed.

The patient removal began Wednesday and probably will be completed Friday, Wandel said. In all, 42 welfare patients were to be removed, leaving two non-welfare patients behind, he said.

"They spit 'em (welfare patients) all over — wherever they could find an empty bed."

Wandel, a licensed nursing home administrator, said he sold the 18-year-old nursing home last year to James A. Cummins Jr. on April 1, 1976, the manor was taken over by Cummins, Wandel said.

Wandel said he stepped in recently to help out at the home, partially because he still has a "sizeable (financial) investment" in Orchard Hill. Plus, Wandel said, Cummins is "allowing me the privilege of coming in here and trying to help these old people and staff."

Wandel charged that Orchard Hill failed to meet federal standards because of "mismanagement."

"The principal reason for not coming up to standards? Mismanagement. Up until about a year ago, it (Orchard Hill) had a good reputation — best in the Omaha area," Wandel said.

Wandel said the State Health Department found numerous deficiencies at Orchard Hill and tried to work with Cummins to correct the inadequacies.

Wandel also said he has tried to get permission from the State Departments of Welfare and Health to rectify the deficiencies at the home. But, Wandel said, department officials "won't work with me."

Nebraska accused of Rome fraud

Rome (AP) — James Roderick Russell, identified as a businessman from Nebraska, has been arrested and jailed here on fraud charges involving the marketing of detergents in an alleged pyramid sales scheme, police reported Thursday.

Police sources also reported that arrest warrants had been sworn out for another dozen U.S. nationals but that none had been arrested.

According to the police, Russell is president of Bestline Spa, a firm based in Rome that set up a distributorship for selling detergents door-to-door.

Repeated phone calls to the Bestline offices went unanswered.

Police gave the following account.

Company officials lined up agents to sell the products. These agents were required to buy 1.5 million lire worth — $1,650 — of goods.

Because an area was often saturated with distributors, subsequent sales by the agents were sometimes difficult, but they were allowed to work off their debts to the company by lining up further agents.

The system is known as "pyramid selling," and has been banned in some countries, including parts of the United States.

Police said Russell had 8,000 distributors lined up, and could have taken in over $13 million.

Man wakes up to changed life

West Point (AP) — Lloyd Harrington, 56, of rural West Point had his life changed last September when his heart stopped beating for four minutes.

"There's no one who can tell me now that that wasn't my day of judgment," he said.

He described envisioning a "kaleidoscope of lights" and experiencing a feeling of "extreme emotional torment" which no words can describe.

When the feeling subsided, he said he felt "peace and happiness." When I woke up, the doctor said, "We're lucky you're here, Lloyd."

Harrington was an office manager at the nearby Iowa Beef Processors Inc. plant for six years prior to his heart attack.

He put in six 10-hour days each week and smoked more than two packs of cigarettes daily, along with "two or three cigars and several pipes of tobacco."

Last summer, he began to have chest pains and to experience shortness of breath while doing normal light work such as pushing the lawn mower. Finally, in July he went to a doctor.

I thought I had emphysema or lung cancer. It didn't occur to me it could be heart trouble.

The physician told Harrington not to do anything too physical. He also told him to quit smoking, but he didn't until Sept. 3.

That night Harrington went to bed with chest pains. He took the prescribed dose of nitroglycerin, but the pain got worse. At midnight, he called the doctor who arrived "within 15 minutes."

The doctor drove him to the hospital where he was placed in the intensive care unit.

He thought he was doing good but at 10:30 a.m., Sept. 7,

"Boom! I went into cardiac arrest. I was unconscious, clinically dead for four minutes with no respiration or circulation."

While recovering, he saw two other heart attack victims brought into the hospital on consecutive days. Both were in their 60s; neither survived.

I got the message. I was saved for some reason or other.

Harrington said,

Now that he is back on his feet, Harrington's whole lifestyle has changed. He does not work at a job; he speaks to church and civic organizations relating his experiences, telling his audiences not to fear death.

I don't fear death now at all. It's a beautiful experience.

Omaha policeman fired

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha Police Department fired a 10-year veteran officer this week when other police officers found 9 1/4 ounces of marijuana at his home.

He was identified as Brian Johnson, 32, of the burglary unit. Police went to his home on a tip, investigating officers said. Johnson was issued a ticket for misdemeanor possession of marijuana.

Five agents cited

Five Nebraska county Extension agents have been named state winners of the 1977 public information awards program, it was announced Thursday.

Omaha board member asks for resignations

Omaha (AP) — Omaha Public School Board member Don Cunningham Thursday called for the resignation of five members of the school board.

In a press conference, Cunningham asked board members Dr. Paul Kennedy, Dorothy Beavers, Mrs. Morris Frank, Mrs. Garth Goodrich, Leo Hoffman to resign for what he called violation of the spirit of the open meetings law and gross partiality.

Cunningham charged that the five conspired to limit the number of nominees to fill a vacancy on the school board. He said he believes the five have talked privately about whom they wanted to fill the vacancy and that he said violates the section of the open meetings law that prohibits closed meetings for the discussion or selection of new board members.

Cunningham said he will take his complaints to the school board ethics committee if the five do not resign.

Harvesting begins for wheat

Lincoln Star Special

Barneston — Wheat harvesting began this week in southeastern Gage County near the Kansas border, a grain elevator spokesman reported Thursday.

The first load of 1977 winter wheat arrived at the Lincoln Grain Co. Wednesday, a spokesman said.

Taken from the Gerald Powell wheat fields four miles east of Barneston, the grain was running 20 bushels per acre according to Mike Graham, who is employed at the elevator.

Powell's wheat tested good at 50 pounds with moisture 13 to 10.

High humidity in the area was delaying harvest operations.

Bear shrugs drugs, rangers

Jackson, Wyo. (AP) — A 200-pound black bear that bit a 14-year-old Omaha, Neb., Boy Scout in the leg Tuesday proved Thursday that it is as thick skinned as it is mean.

A Grand Teton National Park spokesman said the bear shrugged off two tranquilizer darts meant to kill the animal, eluded rangers and disappeared into the mountains northwest of here Thursday.

The rangers had located the bear at a campground where the animal was rummaging through a food locker and terrorizing some campers.

Park officials said rangers would try again to find and destroy the bear.

'Ads may make men look foolish'

Omaha (AP) — Men may look more foolish than women in "ring around the collar" type commercials that imply women are responsible for men's appearance, according to the president of the National Association of Commissions for Women.

"I don't know who is made a bigger fool — men or women. Some of the children are starting to ask why he doesn't wash his neck," Dr. Emily Taylor of Maryland told a news conference Thursday.

Protests over sexism in television commercials are "happening all over the country (and) the ads do get removed," said Anita Miller of Sacramento, who heads the California Commission on the Status of Women.

The addition of women to news teams has allowed viewers to see "not only women in the ads, the dingbats, but professional women" as well, Mrs. Miller said.

Dr. Taylor said ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment is a "top issue" for the association, which is meeting Thursday through Saturday in Omaha.

"The population in general is very supportive" of equality and that support "must be translated into legislative votes," Dr. Taylor said. "In no way do we assume that men cannot be persuaded to vote appropriately on this issue."

The strength of 15 state Equal Rights Amendments that have been ratified "does not compare" with the power of an amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Mrs. Miller said. "The point that must always be remembered is that the state legislature gives, the legislature can also take away."

Dr. Taylor said that although President Carter has appointed some "very fine people," she is "not personally satisfied with what he's done" to promote equality in government.

Sharyn Campbell of Washington, D.C., who is the association's vice president, said women "have made a great deal of progress in the credit field," but "implementation of the law is not yet complete."

It's in the best interest of the credit field, a profit-oriented industry, "to provide equality in credit," she said.

Treatment centers different

By Linda Olg
Star Staff Writer

Full Circle and the Independence Center do not unnecessarily duplicate services, according to a study prepared by the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs (LCAD).

The two residential drug and alcoholism treatment centers serve different clients and provide specialized services to accommodate those differences, the LCAD study found.

The report, prepared at the request of the City County Common, was approved Thursday by the LCAD board and forwarded to the Common by way of the city-county human services administrator.

"It is necessary to duplicate separate and distinct in-patient, out-patient and family care programs if the needs of the clients served by the two agencies are to be met," the study concluded. Treatment at the two centers is "specialized" by methods of treatment and types of clients.

There are "more programmatic dissimilarities than similarities," a sub-committee found after extensive discussions with the agencies.

Full Circle, operated by Lincoln-Lancaster Drug Projects, is primarily a residential treatment center for persons between the ages of 17 and 29. The Independence Center is classified as an in-patient hospital model for persons over 14 years of age.

The study found that there are differences in age, sex, education and employment of residents at the two facilities.

Based on statistics from the agencies for the five-month period beginning May 1, 1976, the study found that the average Full Circle patient was a male under 30 who has not finished high school and is unemployed. During the same time, the average Independence Center in-patient was a male 30 or older who has finished high school and is employed.

Both agencies also treat clients on an out-patient basis.

Full Circle's clients also reflected "many asocial tendencies" and were alienated from their families.

Full Circle's clients were more in need of habilitation while Independence Center's clients were more in need of rehabilitation," the study found.

For the reporting period, 81.2% of Full Circle's total clients were classified as having the primary problem (of) abuse of drugs other than alcohol, compared to 10.2% at the Independence Center. More than 18% of Full Circle's clients' primary problem was alcohol abuse, 57.4% at the Independence Center. In addition, 31.3% of the Independence Center's clients were addicted to both alcohol and drugs.

Information budget may be stopped

The public information component of the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs (LCAD) may be forced by the wayside as the result of the city's and county's money crunch.

The city and county joint budget committee has recommended that LCAD's community awareness program not be funded next year, city-county human services administrator Bob Clark told the LCAD board Thursday. LCAD is one of 12 private agencies receiving city and county funds.

LCAD requested $66,000 in city and county funds for the coming fiscal year; the joint budget committee is recommending $30,500 for the agency for administration and planning functions plus a half-time statistician, Clark said.

"We feel community awareness is one of the key functions of this council," said Rich Jochem, LCAD executive director. During this tight budget year it is "seen perhaps as not a priority."

However, he added, such a program is required for LCAD's affiliation with the National Council on Alcoholism.

The joint budget committee recommended cuts "where the least damage would be done" to prevent "disruption of direct service" to clients, Clark said.

Women's group to demonstrate outside Coors

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) plans a demonstration Saturday outside the South Omaha Coors distributorship

NOW members charged in a news release that profits from the Coors brewery in Golden, Colo., have been channeled through Adolph Coors into organizations opposing the Equal Rights Amendment.

NOW reported the John Birch Society is one such organization. "Think before you drink," is the slogan NOW has adopted for its anti-Coors stand.

Aurora (UPI) — Two Ohio men were charged Thursday in Hamilton County Court with robbing a Des Moines, Iowa, hitchhiker at knife-point Wednesday.

Authorities identified the Ohio men as Charles Wilder and William Meyers, but their ages and addresses were not given. Wilder and Meyers were being held in the Hamilton County jail.

Authorities said the two men allegedly robbed David Wolz, 23, Des Moines, Iowa, of about $20. Wolz, who was hitchhiking through Nebraska, was robbed on a county road one mile east and one mile south of the Interstate 80 interchange near Aurora, authorities said.

Three other persons in the Ohio car were taken into custody Wednesday night for questioning, but were not charged, officials said. The other three persons might be used as witnesses in the case, officials said.

Bond battling federal over-regulation

Associated Press

Former Missouri Gov. Christopher (Kit) Bond said Thursday his latest interest, for which he was here seeking financial backing, is an extension of his battle to cut through federal red tape.

Bond was in Lincoln in his new role as president of the Great Plains Legal Foundation headquartered in Kansas City, and met with business and civic leaders.

"We speak out for what I think is clearly the majority viewpoint in America today: less federal regulation," Bond said.

Bond, 38, lost his bid for reelection as governor of Missouri, but the Republican said that doesn't mean he has lost interest in politics.

However, his project with the foundation was characterized by him as an involvement with a nonpartisan and nonprofit organization.

The foundation is designed to provide free legal representation for individuals or groups in nine states, including Nebraska, when a case might lead to the foundation goal of "limiting government regulations and their interference with peoples' lives."

Examples of the foundation's work include representation of the Heart of America affiliate of the American Diabetes Foundation in opposition to the, federal government's proposal to ban saccharin.

Bond said his organization's position is the opposite of that advanced by consumer advocate Ralph Nader in the saccharin controversy.

"Nader feels it's in the best interests of the public to ban saccharin, but we've shown that it's very definitely not in the best interests of diabetics," he said. "It's another bit of government regulation that the public can ill afford."

The foundation also represents the American Association of Presidents of Independent Colleges and Universities in a lawsuit dealing with sex discrimination guidelines of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Selection of chancellor for UNO may be near

Associated Press

University of Nebraska President Ronald Roskens has indicated that a new chancellor for the university's Omaha campus may be chosen next month.

Roskens said procedures for interviewing the five remaining candidates will be discussed at the Board of Regents meeting slated for June 25 at Scottsbluff.

The five candidates came from an original list of 140 names compiled by a UNO search committee headed by Dale TeKolste a Northern Natural Gas Co. board vice chairman.

Preliminary inquiries about the five remaining candidates for the post have begun, according to Roskens, who was chancellor of UNO from 1972 until the beginning of this year when he was named to head the university system.

"We have not had any direct contact with any persons," Roskens said. However, Roskens did indicate he hoped the new UNO chancellor could be selected at the July regents meeting.

Withheld $1.4 million discussed

Associated Press

A Nebraska health official is in Washington, D.C., this week conferring with the state's congressional delegation about potential Medicaid payment cuts to the state.

He is Jim L. Brown, executive director of the Nebraska Health Care Association. His primary interest during the visit is to discuss with lawmakers the decision by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to withhold nearly $1.4 million in payments from Nebraska.

The federal department plans to withhold total of $142 million from some 20 states because of failure to meet requirements for reviewing the quality and efficiency of nursing home care.

The action was scheduled for July 1, but a U.S. House committee voted earlier this week to give a six-month extension to let states try to comply with the requirements.

Brown and Eldin Ehrlich, head of Nebraska's Welfare Department, say the requirements are unreasonable.

Ehrlich said the situation wasn't the nursing home industry's fault, but was the "procedural impact of a bad federal law." Ehrlich has sent the department's legal adviser to Washington, also in an attempt to deal with the matter.

When you're a mother taking music lessons, there's no one to make you practice.

But adults who take up musical instruments appear to need no prodding. They play because they want to, not because they have to.

Sue Brown always had a yen to play the violin.

She took lessons as a child, was told she had no talent and stopped soon after. Some 25 years later, the mother of two, began lessons again on the very same violin that discouraged her years before.

Her close friend, Karen Duncan, had signed her son up to study violin by the Suzuki method with Marilyn O'Boyle. "As long as you've found a teacher; see if she'll take two older gals," Sue urged her friend.

They learned Mrs. O'Boyle was reluctant to take on adults because she felt they weren't disciplined enough. The women assured the teacher they were serious about the challenge. "She gave us a month and said we'd probably want to quit," Mrs. Duncan related.

Two years later, the two have advanced many melodies beyond their first song — "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star."

"It's cute when you see a 3-year-old play it," Mrs. Brown says, not inviting any comparison. "But we hung in there, didn't we?"

The two say their teacher has learned from them that the Suzuki method, offered to children as young as 2, is suited for all age levels.

Learning rhythm variations to the chants of "hamburger-hamburger" or "apple-green-apple" didn't bother the adults. The Suzuki method was not tailored to grown-up tastes.

The console Mrs. Brown when she couldn't conquer a chord, the teacher would assure her that the children have trouble at that very same point too. Some comfort, Mrs. Brown remembers thinking.

The leap from nursery rhymes to violin concertos came with weekly two-hour lessons and daily practice sessions. One day the friends discovered they each did their practicing in the kitchen. Waiting for the potatoes to parboil, they'd play a tune or two. "When I'm having trouble with a song, I just imagine my kitchen and get back in my rut," Mrs. Brown admits.

Both women began lessons with the serious intent of learning to play... for themselves, if not for others. "I'm a closet violinist," Mrs. Brown confides. But the fun factor is there and they say that keeps them at it.

"We're friends and we wanted to do something challenging together," Mrs. Brown offers. "And to prove we weren't so old we couldn't learn a new trick," Mrs. Duncan adds with a laugh.

Their goal is to hold a small dinner party and musical evening for their close friends, some of whom don't believe they really can play, and bedazzle their guests with a performance of Bach's concerto for two violins.

Two years ago they wouldn't have believed that time would ever come. Now, it's just around the corner.

Eighteen months into piano lessons, Jan Kauffman isn't so anxious to play for anyone else just now. The memories of her recent recital performance are still too fresh. Instead of a handful of unknowns in the audiences, as there had been the first year, Mrs. Kauffman faced several couples whose children, on her recommendation, were taking lessons from the same teacher.

"I never thought about the recital and that all my friends would be there. I was just undone," she said.

The last to play, following her daughter's flawless performance, she went blank on one of her numbers. "I was just shaking. I even shake for my teacher," she confides. "But I can absolutely bang it out when I'm by myself."

Except at recital times, Mrs. Kauffman finds the piano an instrument of pleasure, not pain. In fact, the antique upright grand keyboard cajoled her into lessons. "The whole idea of the piano was for the kids," she said. "But I loved it so and was frustrated because I couldn't play it." She began lessons even before her children.

Because she's an adult taking lessons, many think she's a serious musician who has been studying for years. When she tells friends she has to be home by 3 o'clock for piano lessons, they all assume she's the teacher.

While some friends find her new hobby strange, she doesn't mind. "It's really therapy for me to sit down and play for my own pleasure," Mrs. Kauffman says.

Her enthusiasm for the piano spread to a friend, Jeannie Sutter, who started lessons this winter with her 9-year-old daughter Tiffany.

One of the two "big kids" — Mrs. Kauffman's terminology — at the recital, Mrs. Sutter remembers her sweaty hands and rising blood pressure. "I was a wreck. I don't know why, but I'm not surprised. I remember being nervous at recitals as a child." She played as a child, but quit when she got active in school. Her recital piece, "Tannym" was a song most people are familiar with. If she made mistakes, she was sure they would be noticed. "I would have felt more secure in a classical piece," she sighed.

Most people don't think they can work lessons into an already busy schedule, Mrs. Sutter said. She found the time. "I knew if I didn't take lessons, I'd never just pick up the playing."

Hotel bar good place to cover revolution

The Lincoln Star

Friday, 6/17/77 ■ Page 17

San Francisco — Summer days and a world full of revolutions. "Ethiopian Rebels Advance," says the morning paper. "Nigerian Rebels Retreat."

Steaming coffee and the world's woes start the day. The staid London Times had the right idea. When I was living in London I read it each morning.

The whole front page was classified ads. No news.

No wars. No murder or mayhem. Just little three-line ads:

"The League Against Cruel Sports seeks your membership and encouragement. The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests." Write Box 66, The Times."

I only got to one revolution. It was so good I never tried for another.

The revolution was in Guatemala. I covered it from the cool bar in the Pan American Hotel on Sixth Avenue. Just a block from the olive-green presidential palace.

Today's revolutions in the morning papers are mostly in Africa. They sound dangerous and uncomfortable.

As it turned out, it was a CIA affair.

Postcard

By Stan Delaplane

If you're looking for a foxhole in a revolution, I recommend the Pan American.

I arrived in a sport shirt — having no time to outfit myself in a proper safari jacket.

I said to a man on a barstool: "What's that you're drinking? What's the revolution all about?"

He said: "A Planter's Punch. I think it's about bananas. Revolutions around here are usually about bananas."

As it turned out, it was a CIA affair.

The revolt was run out of the jungle with an army of less than a hundred patriots. But with a radio transmitter that snarled patriotic threats and was strong enough to reach Boston.

With coffee and the London Times, I got into the day gradually. No shock. Should I join and encourage the League Against Cruel Sports? (Revolution is a cruel sport.)

The sport they're mainly against is fox hunting. When the league hears a fox hunt is coming up — "Yoicks and away!" — they send their members into the field.

The members drop hamburger patties in front of the fox hounds to distract them.

A woman member, when the fox "went to earth," jumped in the foxhole with the fox. Dressed the animal with the Union Jack. Defied the huntsmen to do their worst.

The huntsmen rode off in confusion. The woman member got the league's highest medal. The fox went back to robbing chicken roosts.

"Bed-sitters" were advertised on the front page of The Times. (One room for sitting with a bed in it.) A rector in Kent was seeking donations to save a rose garden. "First planted in the time of King Richard."

Commander Winston, DSO, asked interested persons to write him concerning "slavery which still exists in parts of Africa." (Didn't say whether he wanted to buy a slave or free a slave. That's what made it interesting.)

I said to the dachshund: "I can't handle the front page this morning. Let's turn to the 'Pets' column in classified."

About the revolution: The powerful radio scared the president out of the country. A new president came in. He said he was against communism. We all had a last Planter's Punch in the Pan American. Caught the afternoon plane back to Mexico City.

Note the difference between this hand and the first one, where two hearts denoted only a moderate interest in slam. Here, with more points and better distribution, slam chances are much brighter.

2. One notrump. Without a part score, the normal response would be either one spade or two diamonds, but with it the only proper response is one notrump. Ordinarily, one notrump indicates 6 to 9 points, but the range widens to 6 to 12 when there is a part score of 90.

3. Two notrump. This is a clear-cut slam try. A two notrump response to a one bid in spades ordinarily indicates 13 to 15 points, but with a part score of 90 the range is slightly higher. Partner may pass with minimum values, since the jump response is not forcing.

What would your response be?

By B. Jay Becker

You have a part score of 90, and your partner opens with One Heart. What would you respond with each of the following five hands?

1. ♠ KQ74 ♥ AJ93 ♦ J8 ♣ J96
2. ♠ J983 ♥ 85 ♦ AKJ6 ♣ Q72
3. ♠ A96 ♥ Q94 ♦ KC8 ♣ A75
4. ♠ KJ95 ♥ AQ76 ♦ KJ74 ♣ 10
5. ♠ 4 ♥ AQ8 ♦ AK93 ♣ KQ8

1. Two hearts. The meanings of many bids change when a side has part score. Thus, it would be normal on this hand to respond three hearts (forcing) without a part score, but with the partial you should bid only two hearts.

As you are voluntarily raising partner one level past game, two hearts constitute a moderate slam try.

The chief purpose of the raise, rather than a pass, is to cater to those relatively few hands that would offer a chance for a slam. Thus, partner might have always been a good boy and a good student, but he is an introvert. He has no friends and claims he doesn't want any.

He is sarcastic and arrogant, shows no affection and seems to want none.

He could be very good-looking, but over the years he has gained so much weight now refuses to weigh himself. He pretends he doesn't care how he looks, and he continues to grow fatter.

We have begged and bribed him, but he doesn't listen. He's an only child, and it's breaking my heart. Please help me.

DETROIT

DEAR DETROIT: An obese child is an unhappy child who is asking for help. He's built a wall of fat around himself to keep others from getting close enough to discover his imperfections. (We all have them.) He needs professional help. Start with your family doctor, and don't put it off.

DEAR ABBY: My brother spanks his 3-year-old son and will not allow the little guy to cry. If he cries, he gets spanked again and again. I have seen this go on for hours. (He says this will make a "man" out of him.) He also spanks the child much too hard.

My brother won't listen to anyone. And my sister-in-law doesn't do anything about it. Or maybe she can't.

What can I do? If I report my relatives to the authorities, and the child is taken from his parents' home, I'm afraid it might do him more harm than those spankings will. What can be done? This situation is worrying me to death.

SICK AT HEART

DEAR SICK: To be aware of such cruelty and do nothing is morally wrong. Your brother sounds as though he is desperately in need of treatment. And his wife couldn't be too well either to allow such goings on.

Phone PARENTS ANONYMOUS at this toll-free number:

DEAR ABBY: Someone wrote to ask if she should send a gift to a mother who had given birth to a child born with Down's Syndrome. Thank you for saying yes.

I know your advice was sound because I gave birth to such a child. Friends called. They stopped by. They even gave me a surprise shower when my baby was a month old.

Here is the message on one card that meant so much to me:

God gave this child to you to guide.

To love, to walk thru life beside.

A little child so full of charms,

To fill a pair of loving arms.

God picked you out because he knew.

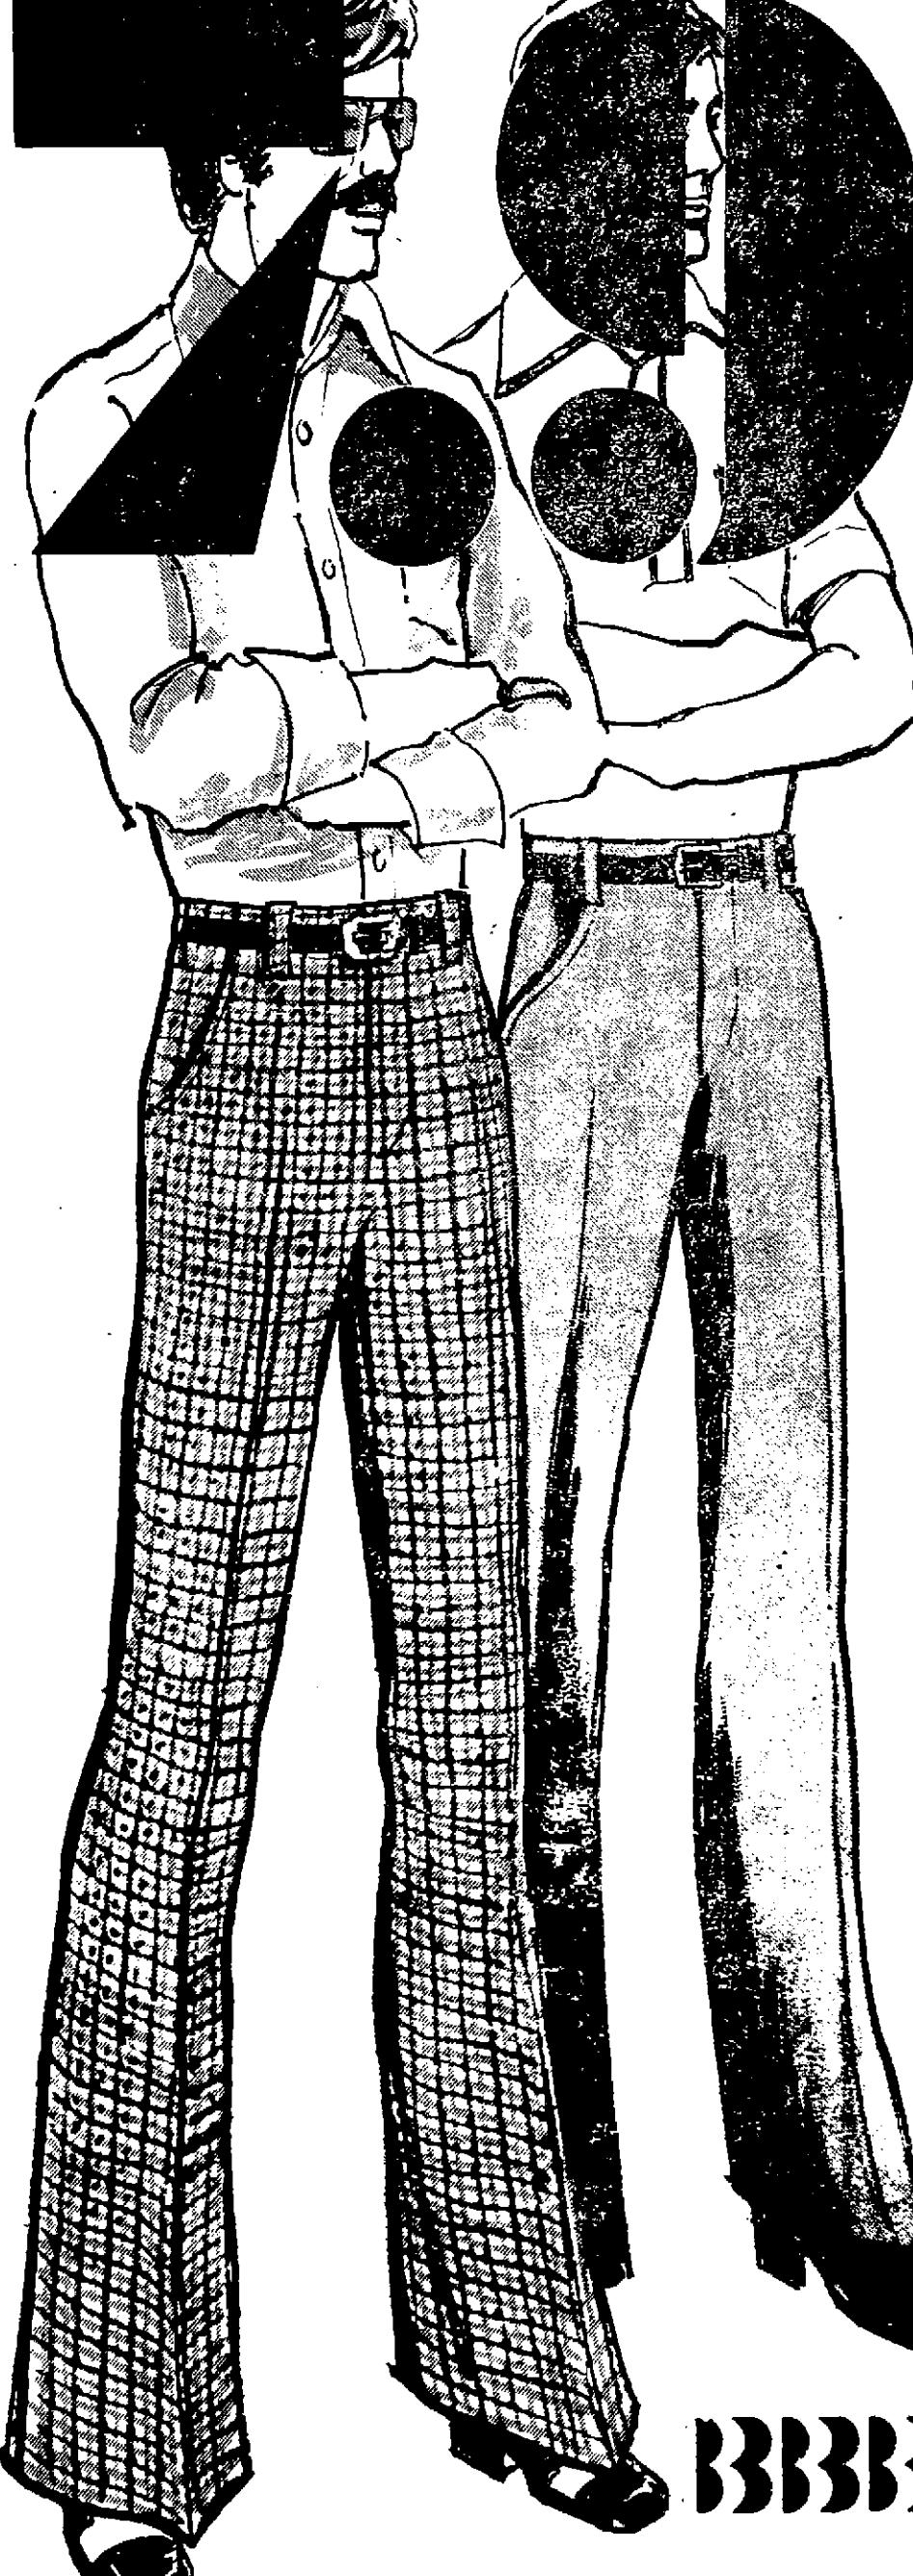

How safe His child would be with you.

God bless friends like that.

Citizens invited to talk on zoning

Lincoln and Lancaster County residents will get a chance next week to say how they think zoning ordinances should be re drafted to put the Comprehensive Plan into operation.

Discussion groups will form in the County-City Building cafeteria Thursday at 7 p.m.

"If you've got your own particular hobby horse that you've been riding for a while, and you want it included in the ordinance, now is the time to squawk about it," said Dan Schlitt, Goals and Policies Committee chairman.

But he stressed that this is not the time to try to amend the Comprehensive Plan or re-fight some of its battles.

'Baptists ought not always like Jimmy Carter'

Kansas City (AP) — Billy Graham said Southern Baptists ought not feel they must approve of everything Jimmy Carter may say or do. Both the President and the evangelist are Southern Baptists.

Graham made his comment at a news conference a few hours before he was to deliver the closing address at the annual assembly of the Southern Baptist Convention.

He told the news conference that any time a religious movement gets high visibility "there is a danger we may compromise convictions or do something we may regret later."

Nebraskans warned of commodity option sales

United Press International

Attorney General Paul Douglas warned Nebraskans Thursday to use caution in the purchase of London commodity options being offered principally by New York and Florida companies.

The sales, he said, are being made through telephone calls and are followed up by direct mail solicitations.

Douglas said several Nebraskans have complained to him of the fact that high pressure tactics have been used and certain misrepresentations were made regarding the potential profitability of the options.

He said the options are being purchased for the London Commodities Market and are referred to as "London options."

Because of the volatile nature of the Commodities Market, these purchases are not suitable for many persons, the attorney general said, adding that a person should not buy such an option unless he or she is prepared to sustain a total loss of the purchase price.

Such transactions, Douglas said, should be entered into only by persons who are aware of the potential for loss and who understand the nature and extent of their rights and obligations.

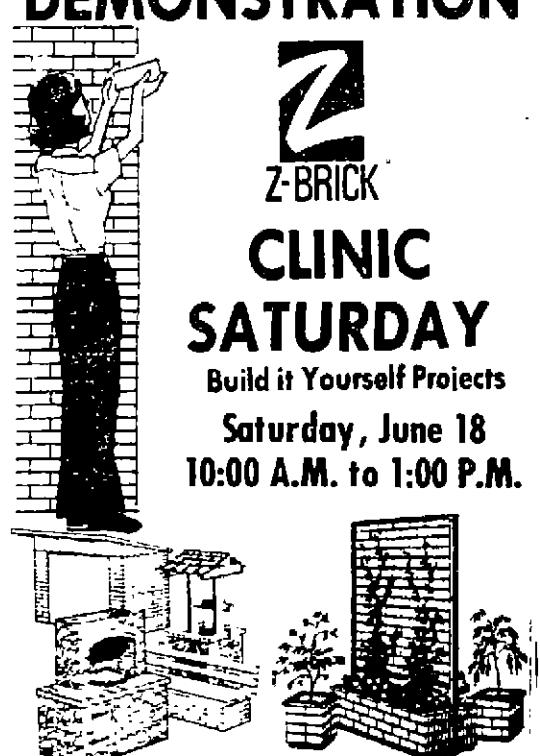

The options being offered are not approved or disapproved by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission, a federal agency that licenses and regulates commodity option firms.

Woman pleads innocent to murder charge

Omaha (UPI) — A young Colorado woman pleaded innocent Thursday to a first degree murder charge filed in a motel shooting death of an Iowa clothing salesman.

Mary Larson, 24, Canon City, Colo., appeared before Douglas County District Judge John Murphy who said her trial would be scheduled for sometime next month.

Murphy approved Mrs. Larson's request to be represented by the Douglas County public defender's office.

Mrs. Larson and her boyfriend, Wesley Massey, 34, were charged in the May 23 shooting death of Gary L. Damron, 20, Ankeny, Iowa, at a southwest Omaha motel.

Mrs. Larson allegedly lured Damron to her motel room where Massey was waiting to rob him.

Police said Damron and Massey, a Colorado State Prison escapee, started fighting and Massey subsequently shot and killed Damron.

Mrs. Larson was apprehended shortly after the incident, while Massey was captured four days later at the home of an ex-wife in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The day before his capture, Massey allegedly abducted Richard Gilliam, a federal reserve bank guard in Omaha and released him unharmed after forcing Gilliam to drive him to Denver.

Massey is awaiting extradition from Colorado to Nebraska.

New York (AP) — The stock market bounced back from some early selling Thursday to record a modest gain in active trading.

Stocks of independent oil and gas producers were strong following an appeals court's favorable ruling on natural gas pricing.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, off about 5 points in early trading, closed with a 2.88 gain at 920.45.

Advancing issues led declines by about a 4-3 margin on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume reached 24.31 million shares up from 22.64 million Wednesday.

The oil and gas issues benefited from a ruling by a panel of three judges upholding the Federal Power Commission's decision last summer to raise the price of natural gas sold interstate to $1.42 per thousand cubic feet.

Among the sharpest percentage gainers as of the 4 p.m. close of the NYSE were Reserve Oil & Gas, up 1% at 19, Mesa Petroleum, ahead 1% at 35%, and Wilshire Oil of Texas, ahead 1/2 at 8 1/4.

On the American Stock Exchange, Houston Oil & Minerals climbed 2% to 54, Great Basins Petroleum added 1/2 to 9 1/2, and Husky Oil rose 1/2 to 27 1/2.

Elsewhere within the market, prices continued their fitful, zigzag behavior of the past few weeks against a generally favorable news background.

Late Wednesday the government reported a 11 percent increase in industrial production for May.

Dobson pointed to a decline in retail sales in the Omaha central business district.

The suggestion came from Kenneth Dobson, technical director of the National Council for Urban Economic Development in Washington. He said the business executives could advise area policymakers on the economic status of the city.

The recommendation came at a meeting at which plans for Omaha's economic development were discussed. The suggestion was the outgrowth of a study presented to former Mayor Robert Cunningham last month.

The national council recommended in that study that public and private money be combined to help finance economic development in Omaha.
